PREFACE.

The rapid extension of steam as a propelling power, and electricity as a medium for the transmission of thought and information between distant places, and their combined effect upon the progress of commercial enterprise, have introduced new and intimate relations between the various countries of the world, opening fresh fields for trade and commerce. These changes have rendered, in a measure, obsolete the works upon statistics and geography which have hitherto been found adequate to the purposes for which they were designed. New and valuable contributions have been continually made to the stock of statistical and geographical information, which have not as yet been condensed into an accessible form. They remain scattered through a great number of large works, many of them too rare and expensive to be available to the mass of the community. The late censuses of the United States of America, Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, furnish exceedingly full and complete returns of the social, agricultural, and industrial statistics of the people. The census returns of Mexico, the States of Central America, South America, of Great Britain, and the countries of Continental Europe, are all of recent date; and, in addition to these, there have been recently published many elaborate and complete works upon statistics and geography, and various special branches of science. Of these, the most important have been laboriously consulted and collated in the preparation of the present work, and the information contained in them has been arranged and classified in such a manner as to be readily available to the inquirer. In treating of the countries of the Old World, the Editor has made diligent use of the labors of European writers who have devoted themselves to geographical and statistical researches. In respect to the Western Continent, he has been obliged to have personal recourse to original sources not before collected and arranged. The commercial statistics of the United States, British America, Mexico, and South America, and also of the European States, have, in particular, been most laboriously consulted.

In offering this work to the public, the main object has been to furnish the public with a reliable Gazetteer, perfect as such a work could reasonably be made, and at a moderate cost. It will be found to embrace within one volume a much greater number of names than any Gazetteer now in existence, arranged on a methodical plan, and combining correctness of statement with the latest and most reliable statistics of Population, Agriculture, Commerce, National Industries, Navigation, Railroads, &c. "A conspicuous feature of this work is to enter the proper name of each place in strictly alphabetical order, as it appears in the language of the country; viz., Danish, French, German, Italian, Russian and Spanish names are written and accentuated on this plan, and the rendered English names will be found immediately following; as, Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle); Wien (Vienna); &c., &c. The most important places in ancient geography, such as towns of which ruins remain, have been inserted in proper order, and the ancient names of modern places are given, where ascertained. The old provinces of France, the Netherlands, and Spain, the circles of the German Empire, and the countries forming the French Empire under Napoleon, which are now superseded by other divisions, but still often referred to, are described in the order of the alphabet. In so far as space would admit, accurate notices have been given of the geology and physical geography, the meteorological and mineralogical conditions of the countries and districts. Great care has been taken to ascertain the true elevation of mountains above the level of the sea, and, wherever foreign authorities have been relied on, their measurements have been rendered into English equivalents. In a book comprising such a multitude of facts, derived from works written in many different languages, in each of which a different standard of measurement is used, and in which the statements are often vague and sometimes contradictory, it is impossible altogether to avoid errors and omissions. For these, allowance will be most readily made by those who are best able to detect and remedy them. But, from the plan on which this work has been conducted, and the scrupulous care bestowed on every portion of its progress, it is hoped that these will be found unimportant."

The portion relating to Europe, Asia, and Africa, and a large part of South America, has been supplied from "Johnston's General Gazetteer of the World," well known as the most complete work of the kind published in Europe. But each article has been most scrupulously examined and compared, in many cases much modified, new and valuable statistics in every department added, and much new matter derived from the census of Great Britain, and many places given not to be found in Johnston's work. With regard to the part relating to the American continent, a large amount of new matter will be found incorporated, rendering it more complete than any other similar work extant.

It is confidently hoped that this Gazetteer will fully meet the wants of the times, and that the general reader, the student, the merchant, and the artisan, will find in it all the information adapted to their special requirements, brought down, as nearly as possible, to the present day, in a form more commodious and accessible than in any other work of similar character which has been offered to the public.

JANUARY, 1855.

TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS AND SIGNS.

In the preparation of this work, in order to a greater condensation of matter, many ellipses and abbreviations have been necessary. It is presumed that every reader would prefer an accumulation of facts to smoothness, or even regularity of periods. A little attention to these abbreviations will render them familiar, and, in most instances, their import will suggest itself, without a reference to the table of explanation.

DISTANCES are stated by the railroad and post routes, when on either; in other cases, direct.

ALL MEASUREMENTS OF DISTANCES are reduced to statute miles, and elevations to feet.

TEMPERATURE is given according to the Fahrenheit thermometer.

The name in italics, after the leading word, generally expresses the ancient name, or a variety of the national; those names following descriptions of places refer to other articles for additional information.

In compound names the leading word is given under the specific letter, with the prefix following; as, ANDREWS (ST.). But, in a few instances, the prefix forms the leading word, as in SAN, SANTO, SAO, &c.; and, in the United States of America, in EAST, WEST, NORTH, and SOUTH; and also in the special articles on the United States, Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia.

All the TOWNS and TOWNSHIPS of the United States, the Canadas, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Great Britain, are entered, however small; also the parishes, hundreds, seigniories, &c.

POPULATIONS are given from the latest national censuses, government returns, and other authorities; most usually with the dates attached.

In the NORTHERN UNITED STATES, every county is divided into townships and city incorporations; the townships being generally from four to six miles square, though their dimensions vary. In New England, the principal village takes the name of the township in which it is situated; but, in some parts of the township, a village occasionally has a different name from that of the township. In New York, the villages have frequently an incorporation distinct from that of the township in which they are situated, and the village is often more prominent than the township; and, in some instances, persons who know well the location of a prominent village, might not be able to name the township in which it is situated. The same is, to a degree, true of the States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and some portions of Illinois. In Delaware, the counties are subdivided into hundreds. In the States south of Pennsylvania and of the Ohio river, and west of the Upper Mississippi, there is no such subdivision as townships; as an incorporated district (although the census gives the population of election precincts in many cases), and a collection of houses, whether few or many, is called a town. In the following work, t. denotes a township, and v. a village, or collection of houses, whether few or many, whether with or without an incorporation. In South Carolina, districts answer to counties in other States, and in Louisiana, parishes.

ABYSSINIA, ABESSINIA or HABESH, a country of E. Africa, extending betw. lat. 7° 40′ & 16° 40′ N.; & lon. 34° 20′ & 43° 20′ E., bounded E. by Adel, N.E. by the Red Sea, N.W. by Nubia, & S. & S.E. by the country of the Gallas. Pop. estim. at 4,500,000. It forms an elevated table-land, and contains many fertile valleys watered by numerous river courses, the chief of which are the Abai (Bahr-el-Azrek or blue Nile), the Tacazze, & the Hawash. Many of its rivers are lost in the sands, or only reach the sea during the rainy season. Lake Dembea or Tzana, about 50 m. in length, is the largest in the country. The highest mtn. range is in the S.W. table-land, where the peak of Abba Yaret attains a height of 15,000 ft., & the Mt. Buahat 14,364 ft.; the upper part of these mtns. is covered with snow, & their sides are clothed with trees & fine grass. The temp. of Abyss. is much lower than that of Nubia or Egypt, owing to the elevation of the soil, the numerous rivers, and the abundant summer rains. The mineral products of the country are iron-ore, rock-salt, & a small quantity of gold. The cultivated grains are wheat, barley, oats, maize, rice, & millet;—fruits, cotton, & coffee are also produced. All the wild animals indigenous to Africa, as lions, elephants, buffaloes, leopards, &c., are found in Abyss.; & domestic animals, horses, mules, asses, cattle, sheep, & goats, are reared in great abundance. In industry & commerce the Abyssinians have made some progress, they manuf. tanned skins, for tents, shields of hide, agricultural implements, coarse cotton, & woollen-cloths, & pottery ware. The imports include raw cotton, pepper, blue & red cotton-cloth, glass, & tobacco. Abyssinia, comprised in the anc. Ethiopia, appears to have been the cradle of African civilization, but the early history of the people is merely traditional: they were converted to Christianity in the time of Constantine, & their first rulers seem to have possessed great influence: in the 6th cent. they conquered part of Yemen in Arabia. The present inhabs. have preserved nothing of their former power; the Turks on the one side, & the ferocious Gallas on the other, have almost entirely separated them from other nations. For more than a century the princes of the anc. dynasty have been deprived of their authority, and the empire has been divided into several petty states, the chf. of which are Shoa, Tigré, and Amhara. Ankobar, cap. of the kingdom of Shoa, is the only place deserving the name of a town, in Abyssinia. [MASSOUAH].

ADRIATIC SEA (Ital. Mare Adriatico) or GULF OF VENICE, is that part of the Mediterr. which extends from the S.E. at lat. 40° to the N.W. at lat. 45° 46′ N. between the coasts of Italy, Illyria, & Albania. It takes its name from the city of Adria, & forms on the W. the gulf of Manfredonia, on the coast of the kingdom of Naples. The N.W. part bears the name of the Gulf of Venice. On the E. side are the gulfs of Trieste, Fiume, & Cattaro, on the coast of Austria, & of Drino in Albania. The water of this sea contains more salt than that of the ocean, & the influence of the tides is little felt. Its shores are generally low on the Venetian side; it has many shoals, & its muddy shores are covered with unwholesome marshes. Its greatest depth is only 22 fathoms, & a great part of it is less than 12 fathoms. On the Dalmatian side the waves dash against enormous rocks, or ripple among beautiful strands formed by the numerous islands which environ the coast, affording to vessels a secure retreat from storms. During summer the navigation of the gulf is safe & simple, because the prevailing wind is very favorable for leaving it, but in winter the S.E. winds cause much destruction. The Adriatic receives few rivers of importance, except the Adige & the Po. Its greatest length, from C. Leuca to Trieste, is 450 m., & its mean breadth is 90 m.

AFGHANISTAN (Afghan-land), an extensive inland country of Asia, lying betw. lat. 28° 50 & 36° 30′ N., & lon. 62° & 72° 30′ E., having E. the Punjab, S. Bwhalpoor, Sinde, & Beloochistan, W. the Persian dom., & N. Indep. Turkestan (Balkh, Koondooz, Kafirstan), from which it is separated by the Hindoo Koosh & its prolongations. Area estim. at 225,000 sq. m., & the pop. at about 5,000,000. 4-5ths of the country consists of rocks & mntns. From the table-land in the N. varying from 15,000 to 16,000 feet in height, summ. of Hindoo Koosh, 20,493 feet, many mountain ranges proceed to the S.E. & W., with summits occasionally rising above the limit of perpetual snow, & enclosing numerous valleys & small plains, some of which are fertile & well watered. The S.W. part of the country is a desert, with an elevation of 3,000 to 5,000 feet. Chief rivers, the Cabool, Helmund, Gomul, Lora, &c.; but none is of great size. The morass Hamoon in the S.W. scarcely belongs to Afghanistan; the only lake of consequence is that of Ab-istada. The vegetation in the low lands is like that of India; rice, cotton, the sugar cane, millet, maize, & turmeric are raised. In the uplands the timber-trees, herbs, & fruits of Europe grow wild; & wheat, barley, beans, turnips, mustard, & artificial grasses are cultivated. Cabool is supposed to excel all other cities in the variety & excellence of its fruits. Tobacco is extensively produced; & India is mostly supplied with madder from hence. Gold, silver, mercury, iron, lead, copper, antimony, coal, sulphur, & naphtha are met with. Arts & husbandry are in a very low condition; carpets are made at Herat, but other manufs. are few, & mostly confined to cotton, woollen, & silk stuffs for home use, with saddlery, harness, & cattle trappings. Sheep & goats are abundant, producing a fine wool used in manufact. of shawls. Imports, coarse cottons, indigo, muslins, silks, & brocade, ivory, wax, sandal-wood, sugar, & spices from India; horses, gold & silver, cochineal, & broad cloth from Turkestan; with some cutlery, hardware, & other European goods from Russia, through Bokhara; silks, cottons, embroidery, & chintz from Persia; slaves from Arabia & Abyssina; silks, tea, porcelain, dyes, & precious metals overland from China; & dates & cocoa nuts from Beloochistan. Altogether the imports may amount to $2,500,000 a year. The exports consists of madder, assafœtida, tobacco, fruits, & horses, with furs, shawls & chintz to India; shawls, turbans, indigo, & other Indian produce to Turkestan; & the same articles, with Herat carpets, to Persia. The demand for British manufactures has lately increased so as nearly to supersede the importation of manufactured goods overland from Russia. Transit trade considerable, & wholly conducted by means of camels & horses, the employment of wheeled vehicles being impracticable. The population comprises Belooches, Usbeks, Huzarehs, Eimauks, Persians, & Hindoos, but the great mass are of the Afghan race, & Mohammedans of the Soonite sect. The Afghans are divided into numerous tribes or clans, the most noted of which are the Dooraunees, Eusfozyees, Ghiljies, & Lahonees; the last named being the principal traders, & the first the tribe in which the monarchy has long been hereditary. The country is subdivided into the three separate principalities of Cabool, Candahar, & Herat. Chief cities, Cabool, Candahar, Herat, Peshawur, Jelalabad, & Ghuznee.

AFIUM-KARA-HISSAR (Black Castle of Opium), a city of Asia Minor, in Anatolia, cap. of Sanjiack, on a mountain side, 50 m. S.S.E. Kutaiah. Pop. estimated at 60,000. (?) It is pretty well built; has a citadel crowning a lofty rock, numerous mosques, chapels, baths, khans, manuf. of black felts, carpets, arms, saddlery, stirrups, & a large trade in opium, grown near it, whence its name.

AFRAGOLA, a town of Naples, cap. cant. prov., & 6 m. N.N.E. Naples. Pop. 13,000. With extensive manufs. of hats.

AFRICA, Libya, one of the great divisions of the Globe, bounded N. by the Strait of Gibraltar & the Mediterranean, which separates it from Europe; E. by the Isthmus of Suez, the Red Sea & the Indian Ocean, by which it is separated from Asia; S. by the Southern Ocean; & W. by the Atlantic, which extends between Africa & America. Africa forms an immense peninsula joined to Asia by the isthmus of Suez, and extending from Ras-el-Krun, lat. 37° 20′ N., to Cape Agulhas, lat. 34° 50′ S., about 5,000 m.; & from Cape Guardafui, lon. 51° 22′ E., to Cape Verde, lon. 17° 32′ W., nearly an equal distance. Area estimated at 12,000,000 sq. m. The principal indentations of coast of Africa, are the gulfs of Sidra & Cabes on the N. in the Mediterranean, the Gulf of Guinea on the W. in the Atlantic, & the Arabian gulf or Red Sea on the N.E. in the Indian Ocean. For isls. of Africa, (see table of population.) The most prominent capes are Bon, Blanco, Ceuta, & Serrat on the N.; Blanco, Verde, Rouge, Palmas, 3 Points, Lopez, & Negro on the W. The Cape of Good Hope & Cape Agulhas on the S.; & Capes Delgado & Guardafui on the E. Africa appears to consist of a series of terraces gradually rising from the coast to the interior, forming extensive plains & elevated table-lands. The best known of its mountain systems are the range of Mount Atlas in the N.W., extending, with its branches, from lat. 27° to 32° N., & attaining, in some of its peaks, an elevation of more than 12,000 feet. The Mts. of Kong between Nigritia & N. Guinea, to the E. of which extend the Komri or Mountains of the Moon, the existence & extreme elevation of which are inferred from the great rivers to which they give rise, although they have not been visited by Europeans; the Mountains of Lupata in the S.E. of Africa, those of Madagascar in the island of the same name, and the Mountains of Abyssinia in the N.E. The principal rivers of Africa are the Nile, an affl. of the Mediterranean; the Senegal, Gambia, Niger or Joliba-Quorra, the Zaire, & the Orange, which flow to the Atlantic, & the Zambeze & the Jubb, affls. of the Indian Ocean. The only known lakes of importance are, Lake Tchad in the interior of Nigritia, Lake

Dembea or Tzana in Abyssinia, & Lake Loudieh in Tunis, which appears to be connected with Lake Melgig in Algeria. Of Lake Nyassi, in lat. 8° S.; lon. 30° E., little is known except its great size. Owing to the position of Africa, the greater part of it being within the torrid zone, & the great extent of its arid plains, its climate is excessive, & its temperature higher than that of any other continent. The great characteristic feature of Africa, is the Sahara, an immense desert region stretching across the N. portion of the continent, between the Atlantic & the Red Sea, composed of burning plains covered with shifting sands, or arid rocks, interspersed occasionally with fertile oases. The mineral riches of Africa are little known, but supposed to be very important. Gold dust is found in most of the rivers; diamonds have recently been gathered in Maghreb (Algeria); salt occurs in many parts of the continent & in the islands; iron, copper, silver, lead, & tin are also among its products, & indications of coal have recently been observed. Africa presents the most striking contrasts in its vegetable productions; in the vicinity of arid deserts, there are countries covered with the richest verdure; wherever the land is sufficiently watered, as on the banks of rivers, & on the declivities of mountains, vegetation is characterized by the utmost vigor & magnificence. Among its vegetable products are the baobab, one of the giants of the vegetable world; a species of teak or oak, valuable for building; the cocoa-nut tree, the date, the palm, orange, citron, olive, the papyrus, & numerous dye-woods, the coffee-tree, sugar-cane, cotton & indigo. The fauna of Africa is still very imperfectly known; it comprises the chimpanzee, a species of monkey, which most resembles man; the elephant, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, zebra, giraffe, buffalo; the lion, leopard, panther, the wolf, fox, jackall, hyena, antelopes & bears. The chief domestic animals are the camel, horse, buffalo, ox, sheep, goats & dogs. Among the birds of Africa may be noticed the ostrich, eagles, vultures, hawks, owls, cuckoos & sun-birds. The commerce of the interior of Africa is conducted by means of caravans, & consists chiefly in gold-dust, copper, ivory, coral, gums, dye-wood, dates, & indigo, which are exchanged for European goods by traders who visit the coasts. The most considerable object of African export, until within a few years, has been the human species; & to their eternal disgrace, Europeans have ever been the principal dealers. In some years as many as 120,000 human beings have been transported from the shores of Africa; but Britain has been the first power to put a stop to this cruel traffic. Freely has she poured out her treasure, & many valuable lives has she sacrificed, in her efforts to suppress this horrid trade. The inhabitants of Africa comprise many varieties of the human species; the most remarkable & best known of these are the Hottentots & Caffres in the S.; the Negro races on the S.W., & in the interior; the Moors on the N.; the Caucasian races in Abyssinia, & the Copts of Egypt. Fêticism, a degraded superstition, is the religion of the greater number of the inhabitants, being professed by nearly all the negroes & the natives of Madagascar. A corrupt form of the Christian religion is professed in Abyssinia & part of Egypt, & Mohammedanism prevails in all the other regions. Africa is usually divided into the following countries—N. Egypt & Barbary, Tripoli, Tunis, Algiers, & Morocco; S. of Barbary, the desert of Sahara, with the oases of Fezzan, Dar-fur, & Kordofan; on the W. Senegambia & Guinea; on the S. the Cape Colony, Caffraria, & the Hottentot country; on the E. Nubia, Abyssinia, Adel, Zanguebar, Mozambique, & Sofala; & in the centre, Soudan. A notice of each of these will be found under their proper heads. The Americans, English, French, Portuguese, Spaniards & Dutch, have colonial establishments in Africa. The superficial extent of this great division can be but approximately estimated. Malte Brun and the editors of the Dictionnaire Geographique Universal estimate it at 1,750,000 French sq. leagues of 25 to a degree, or 18,430,000 British sq. m. Ukert 531,638 German, or 11,961,675 English square miles.

The population of the continent of Africa is merely conjectural, with the exception of Algeria, Liberia, Cape of Good Hope, & several small colonies & islands. Pinkerton estimates it at 30,000,000, Malte Brun at 70,000,000, Graberg at 99,000,000, & Ukert at 102,000,000.

Federal representative population, 634,514.

The capital is Montgomery, situated on the left bank of the Alabama river, 338 miles above Mobile by the course of the river. Mobile, the metropolis, is the most populous and commercial place in the state. The other principal places are Huntsville, Florence, Wetumpka, Tuscaloosa, Cahaba, Eufala, &c.

Surface, Soil, &c.—The surface of this State exhibits much variety, bordering the Gulf shore, & for some distance interior, it is low & level, soil sandy, & the prevailing timber is pine. The central portion exhibits an undulating surface, with a deep, rich, & productive soil, especially along the margins of streams. Approaching the north it rises into a hilly region, & in the N.E. corner of the State it becomes mountainous. This is caused by the southern termination of the Alleghany ridge which here in crossing the State melts away into a hilly district, & is finally lost in the rolling prairies & gently undulating plains. The Tennessee valley from where it enters the State near the N.E. corner until it leaves it at the N.W. corner, presents rich & fertile bottom lands, & the lands bordering thereon are the richest agricultural portion of the State. The climate varying from the south to the north part of the State, is favorable for the production of its great staples, cotton, rice, sugar, sweet potatoes, & Indian corn, & in the middle & northern part wheat & other cereals. Alabama has great mineral resources: the entire middle region is underlaid with bituminous coal, & deposits of iron ore, & in different localities throughout the State, are lead ore, manganese, limestone, marble, &c.; in the N.E. gold mines have been wrought with some success.

There were in this State in 1850, 4,435,614 acres of land improved & 7,702,067 of unimproved land in farms. Cash value of farms $64,328,224, & the value of implements & machinery was $5,125,666. Live Stock—horses, 128,001; asses & mules, 59,595; milch cows, 227,791; working oxen, 66,961; other cattle, 463,263; sheep, 371,880; swine, 1,394,540; value of live stock, $21,690,112.

Agricultural Products, &c.—Wheat, 294,044 bush. produced; rye, 17,261; Ind. corn, 28,754,948; oats, 2,905,626; barley, 3,958; buckwheat, 348; peas & beans, 892,701; potatoes, 246,091; sweet potatoes, 5,475,234; rice, 2,812,252 pounds. Value of products of the orchard, $15,408; produce of market gardens, $84,821; pounds of butter made, 4,008,811; of cheese, 31,412; sugar, hhds. of, 8,242; maple sugar, 646 pounds; molasses, 83,428 gals.; bees wax & honey, 897,021 pounds; wool, 657,118 pounds produced; cotton, 564,429 bales; flax, 3,921 pounds; silk cocoons, 167; hops, 276 pounds; tobacco, 164,990; hay, 32,685 tons; clover seed, 138 bush.; other grass seeds, 547; flax seed, 69 bushels; & there were made 220 gals. of wine. Value of home made manufactures, $1,934,120; of slaughtered animals, $4,823,485.

Rivers, &c.—Mobile, the principal river is formed by the junction of the Alabama & Tombigbee rivers, & enters Mobile bay by two mouths. The Alabama is navigable for vessels requiring six feet of water 60 ms. above its junction, & has 4 or 5 feet of water 150 m. to the mouth of the Cahawba, & to the junction of Coosa & Tallapoosa, of which it is formed: it has in its shallowest places 3 feet of water. The Tombigbee, the other constituent of Mobile river, is navigable for schooners 120 m. to St. Stephens, & for steamboats to Columbus, Mississippi. Black Warrior, a large branch of it is navigable for steamboats to Tuscaloosa. The Chattahoochee, for a considerable distance separates this State from Georgia on the E. The Tennessee curves southwardly from the N.E. to the N.W. corner of the State, & is navigable for steamboats to Florence, at the foot of the Muscle shoals.

Mobile bay set up 30 m. from the Gulf of Mexico, with an average breadth of 12 m.

Internal Improvements, &c.—Muscle Shoals canal is designed to overcome an obstruction in the Tennessee river, & extends from Florence, 35¼ m., & cost $571,835, & when completed to Brown's Ferry at the head of the shoal is estimated to cost $1,361,057. Huntsville canal extends 16 m. from Triana, on Tennessee river to Huntsville. There were in this state, Jan. 1854, 6 railroads, 4 of which were wholly or in part in operation; aggregate miles finished, 221; cost, $3,546,000; & 65 miles chartered or in course of construction. It is mostly mountainous, & in the N. some summits rise upwards of 9,000 feet; but it has also, in the N., the fertile plains of Scutari & others along the coast, in its central & S. parts. Chief rivers, Drin, Scumbi, Maroshti, & Vojutza; chief lakes, Scutari & Ochrida. The safest port on the Adriatic is that of Avlona. In the N., & on the table lands, maize & potatoes are grown; & smoked mutton, sheep skins, wool, cheese, tallow, bacon, wax, & live stock, are sent to Cattaro, in return for wine, spirits, salt, oil, iron & manuf. goods. The plains yield nearly all the products of S. Europe including cotton at Ochrida. The Albanians, or Arnauts, mostly profess to be Christians of the Roman or Greek churches; but many are Mohammedans; & all are in a very rude condition. Albania was, in 1838, divided into 6 sanjaks & numerous kaihliks, but much of it is only nominally dependent on the Porte. Chief cities, Janina, Scutari, Prisrend, Dulnigno, Kroya, Petsh, Avlona, Berat, Durazzo, Jacova, & Kavaya.

ALEXANDRIA (so called from its founder Alexander the Great), a celebrated city & seaport of Egypt, near the westmost branch of the Nile, on the Mediter., 112 m. N.W. Cairo, with which it communicates by the Mahmudiyeh canal & the Nile. Lat. of Pharos, 31° 12′ 9″ N.; lon. 29° 53′ E. Pop. about 60,000, including 8,000 troops & the artisans employed in the arsenal. The modern city is built on a peninsula (anc. the isl. of Pharos), & on the isthmus connecting it with the continent; the ancient city was on the mainland, where its ruins cover a vast extent of surface. Alexandria has a new palace of the pasha, a large naval arsenal, naval & military hospitals, a custom-house, tribunal of commerce, prim. school of instruction, medical, naval, & other schools. In the new streets & squares it has more the aspect of a European than of an African or Asiatic city. The Turkish quarter is irregular & dirty, but the Frank quarter has many good streets, & a fine square outside the city. Country houses line a part of the ancient canal leading to the W. arm of the Nile, which was restored by Mohammed Ali. There are two ports, in the W. & best of which ships anchor in from 22 to 40 feet water. A castle called Farillon, & serving as a landmark to sailors, replaces the famous Pharos of antiquity. Alexandria is the great emporium of Egypt. Principal exports, corn, cotton, wool, gums, soda, rice, dates, senna, feathers, & other African products, hides, & a few manuf. goods. Cotton is extensively exported, mostly to England, France, & Austria. Principal imports, cotton, woollen, & silk goods, hardware & machinery, with timber, coal, drugs, & colonial products. The annual value of the imports amount to $11,500,000, & the exports to $16,200,000. The navigation returns show that British shipping occupies the first place in Egyptian commerce, the North comes next, Austria the third, & France the fourth. (See Egypt.) Alexandria is an important station in the overland route to India. Consuls of the chief European countries reside here. Of the ancient city, the cisterns, catacombs, Pompey's pillar, & the obelisk called Cleopatra's needle, are the principal remains. On March 21, 1801, the French under Menou were conquered by the British under Sir R. Abercrombie, who was mortally wounded in the battle of Alexandria.

ALGERIA (French, Algérie), a country of N. Africa, Barbary, forming at present a French possession: cap. Algiers. This territory is situated between lat. 35° & 37° N.; extending from lon. 2° 11′ W. to 8° 53′ E., length about 550 m., greatest breadth about 200 m. & comprises a territory of 5,000 sq. ms. Pop. 1852, Europeans, 134,115, of which 66,375 were French, 41,758 Spanish, 7,328 Maltese, 7,574 Italians, 8,723 Germans, &c. The native population amounted in 1843 to 82,423, making a total of 216,538. It is divided into 3 provinces, viz.: Algiers, pop. 57,129; Oran, pop. 48,275; & Constantine, pop. 28,711. Algeria is bounded N. by the Mediterr., S. by the Sahara, E. by Tunis, & W. by Morocco; it is traversed throughout by the Atlas mountains, which rise in successive stages parallel with the coast, the highest points exceeding 7,000 ft. The coast is in general steep, & deficient in good ports. The chf. plains are those of Oran, Metidjah, & Shelif; the principal rivs. are the Wad-el-Gedy, which rises S. of the Atlas range, & flows to the Melgig lake; the Shelif, which rises on the borders of Sahara, & flows to the Mediterr.; the others are the Sebus, Isser, Harna, & Jafna. There are several lakes called sebkhas, which are filled with water in the rainy season, & are generally dry in summer; the chf. of these are in the prov. Algiers, the Zagries in Constantine, the Shott & the Sebkha in the S.E. the Melgig. The climate is in general temperate & healthy on the N. slopes of the mountains, but pestilential in the marshy plains. The heat is often excessive under the influence of the simoom, or hot wind of the desert. From April to Oct. the sky is constantly serene; the winter is mild, & marked by abundant rains; in 1846 there were 57 rainy days & 56 storms. The mean temp. of winter is from 54° to 65°, & of summer 74° to 104° Fahr.; but this elev. temp. is moderated by constant sea breezes. The mountain contains mines of iron, copper, & lead, but their extent is imperfectly known. In the mountains of Bou Hamra there are rich iron mines, which appear to have been worked by the Romans. The country is divided by the natives into the Tel, or country of grain crops, in the N., & the date country in the S. Vegetation is developed with great activity. The level part of the Tel, occupied by Arabs, is very fertile in cereals; & the mountainous country, occupied by the Kabyles, has extensive forests, & rich & varied vegetation. The Algerian Sahara is not, as was long supposed, a sterile desert, but a vast archipelago of oases, each of which presents an animated group of towns & villages, surrounded by olives, figs, vines, & palms. The nomade tribes of the desert rear many sheep & cattle, for their part of the desert is covered with vegetation during the rainy season. Throughout the Tel, wheat, barley, & leguminous are extensively cultivated, & in some places, maize, millet, & rice are raised. Cotton, indigo, & the sugar-cane also succeed well. The natives rear cattle, sheep, & goats. The horses, which are of an excellent breed, are employed only for the saddle; the camel, dromedary, ass, & mule are used for draught. Among wild animals may be noticed, the lion, panther, jackall, & antelope. The harvests are sometimes ravaged by locusts. Excellent coral & sponge is fished on the coasts. The industry of the natives, which formerly consisted chiefly of weaving & the preparation of morocco leather, is, since the French domination, nearly confined to mining, the Jews alone engage in the manuf. of jewelry. Public instruction is making rapid progress in the state. The commerce since its possession by the French has increased very rapidly.

This country, originally inhabited by the Moors & Numidians, was afterwards under the power of the Romans & Vandals. In the 16th cent. it was invaded by Spain, but Barbarossa expelled the Spanish, & founded, under the sovereignty of Turkey, the state of Algiers, which became redoubtable to christians on account of its corsairs, & compelled many of the European states to pay tribute for the protection of their merchant vessels. Repeated attempts were made by the different European powers to subdue this nest of pirates, but without effect. The Algerians having violated the treaty of 1795, with the United States of America, a squadron was sent under command of Com. Decatur to chastise them. On the 17th June 1815, a frigate, and also a brig, was captured from them, & the Dey sued for peace. The Republic was not only the first power on the globe to refuse the payment of tribute, but compelled the pirates to pay for damages sustained. Subsequently in 1816, the city of Algiers was bombarded by the British under Lord Exmouth, after which they continued comparatively quiet until 1827, when the French government, to revenge an insult to their consul, resolved to send an expedition on a great scale to take possession of the country. This was accomplished in 1830; but although the French have nominal possession of the whole territory, only a small portion of the inhabitants acknowledge their authority. Algéria is divided into 3 provs. & the government vested in a governor-general, whose authority is chiefly military. ALLEGHANY, r., the principal head branch of the Ohio r., which see.

ALLEGHANY, or APPALLACHIAN MOUNTAINS, constitute a range of great length, & from 50 to 200 ms. in breadth, & rise in the gently-undulating ridge dividing the waters entering the Tennessee r. & the Mississippi & Gulf of Mexico. It extends E. through the United States into Canada, & terminates in the bold headland of Cape Gaspe. The course of this great range is nearly parallel with the Atlantic, & from 50 to 150 ms. distant from it. It consists of a number of parallel ridges, denominated the Blue Ridge, North mountain, Jackson's mountain, Laurel mountain, Cumberland mountain, &c. In New York it throws off a spur to the N., terminating in the elevated peaks of Cattskill & the Adirondack mts. in New Hampshire, one to the S. terminating in the White mts. Black mt. in North Carolina is the most elevated peak; it rises 6,476 ft. above the sea, although this ridge generally, does not exceed 2,500 feet in height. The Alleghanies divides the waters which flow into the Atlantic on the E., from those which flow into the Mississippi, & the lakes, & the St. Lawrence r. to the W. & N. These ridges rarely present naked summits, but are generally wooded to the top; & between the ridges are many vallies of great fertility. They consist of granite, gneiss, mica & clay slate, primitive limestone, &c.

ALLEGHANY, N. Y., is one of the southern tier of counties, being bounded S. by Pennsylvania. Area, 1,185 sq. ms. It was taken from Genesee co. in 1806. It is drained by Genesee r., which flows nearly through the middle of it, from S. to N., & a number of smaller streams or creeks, which flow into it on each side. The valley of the Genesee contains much excellent land, & the country on each side rises, & in the E. & W. part of the co. consists of an elevated table land, from 1,500 to 2,500 feet above tide water in the Hudson r. The Genesee Valley canal commences at Olean, in Cattaraugus co., on the Alleghany r., & passes through the co. from S. to N. The New York & Erie railroad passes through this co. by a circuitous course, from E. to W. The soil is generally fertile, but better adapted to grazing than to grain. ALPS MOUNTAINS. The Alps are the most remarkable mountains in Europe, whether in regard to extent or elevation; they form a crescent-shaped chain, which extends from the Mediterranean between the gulfs of Lyons & Genoa on the W., to the plains of Hungary on the E., nearly 600 m. in length. They may be divided into the following groups:—the W. Alps, which have a general direction from S. to N., & extend, under the names of the Maritime Alps, from the sea to Mount Viso, near the sources of the Po; the Cottian Alps, which prolong the chain to Mt. Cenis, & include Mt. Genèvre; & the Grecian Alps (Alpes Graiæ), which include Little S. Bernard, & terminate at Mt. Blanc. The E. Alps, or those chains which extend from W. to E., having much greater breadth, are separated into a N. & S. series; the former comprise the Bernese Alps, on the N. of the valley of the Rhone, the Alps of St. Gall, on the N.W. of the valley of the Rhine, the Noric Alps, which may be considered as extending from L. Constance to the Kahlenberg, near Vienna, & the Styrian Alps, a small chain between the Noric & Carnic Alps. The S. series is composed of the Pennine Alps, between Mount Blanc & Monte Rosa; the Lepontine Alps, thence to Mount Bernardin, near the sources of the Upper Rhine; the Rhetian Alps, which terminate at Monte Croce, near the sources of the Piave; & the Carnic Alps, extending to the lowest part of the river Mur, which separates them from the mountains of Bakony. Mont Blanc, which attains an elevation of 15,810 feet, is the culminating point of the Alps & of all Europe; the other principal summits are Mt. Rosa, 15,208 feet; Finsteraarhorn, in the Bernese Alps, 14,106 ft.; Mt. Viso, 12,585 ft.; the Ortler Spitz in the Rhetian Alps, 12,852 ft.; the Gross Glockner in the Noric Alps, 13,100 ft.; the Terglou in the Carnic Alps, 9,380 ft.; & the Eisenhut in the Styrian Alps. The most frequented passes are the Col de Tende in the Maritime Alps, 5,890 ft.; the pass of Mt. Genèvre in the Cottian Alps, 6,560 ft.; that of Mt. Cenis, 6,775 ft.; the pass of the great St. Bernard, 8,150 ft., & the Simplon, 6,592 ft., both in the Pennine Alps; the pass of Mt. St. Gothard, in the Lepontine Alps, 6,976 ft.; the Splügen, 6,939 ft., in the Rhetian Alps; the Loiblberg in the Carnic Alps, & the Semmering in the Noric Alps; the Stelvio, in the emp. of Austria, 9,100 ft., is the highest carriage pass in the Alps, & that of St. Gothard is the only one which is carried over the crest of the mountains; the others generally cross by the beds of torrents. The higher Alps are covered with perpetual snows, & present in their magnificent glaciers, the innumerable cascades which are precipitated from their summits, & the forests & meadows which cover their flanks, the most imposing & picturesque scenery in Europe. It is calculated that in the range of the Alps there are fields of ice covering an area of 1,500 sq. m., of 100 feet in thickness; the glaciers which depend from these move more or less rapidly according to the mildness or severity of the season; their mean rate of motion is from 12 to 25 feet in a year, the greatest velocity, as in rivers, being at the centre. The largest rivers of Europe, including the Danube, Rhine, Rhone, Inn, Drave, Save, & Po, rise in the Alps or their subordinate ranges. The central and higher ridges of the Alps consist of granite, gneiss, & other prim. rocks, flanked by a wide extent of limestone, sandstone, & slate. The higher summits ascend considerably above the lower level of perpetual snows (which in this lat. averages 8,900 feet above the sea); the glaciers descend as low as 3,400 feet above the sea. Wheat is raised at an elevation of 3,600 feet; oats at 4,900 feet; barley, at 5,100 feet; the oak is found to the height of 4,500 feet; pines & larches as high as 6,500 feet above the sea; & the Alpine rose reaches the limit of perpetual snows. Mineral products are chiefly iron, copper, & lead; but quicksilver, rock-salt, & some gold & silver, are met with. In the French Alps, near Grenoble, small veins containing native gold have been worked; after being neglected for half a century, the works were resumed in 1837. Notices of the principal summits & passes in the Alps will be found under their respective names.

ALTAI, an extensive mt'n. system of Upper Asia, stretching from the 80th deg. of E. lon. to the shores of the sea of Okhotsk, & forms the line of separation between the empires of Russia & China. Length from E. to W., including the Aldan range, nearly 5,000 m. This chain, however, has various names in its different sections, & the term Altaï is usually confined to the W. portion of the system, between the rivers Irtish & Selenga, or from lon. 83° to 107° E. East of the latter point (L. Baikil) it abuts on the ranges of the Khingkhan or Yablonoi mts., which reach E.ward to the Pacific at the N. end of Saghalien isl. The Altaï consists of several collateral ranges, the loftiest, Tangun Oola, lying within the Chinese boundary. The mean elevation of the chains may be from 3,000 to 5,000 feet, but M. Bialukha, near the head of the Obe, is estim. at 10,300 feet. The summits are not peaked, but are nearly level plains of considerable extent, interspersed with isolated masses of granite. The points above the line of perpetual snow are all between lats. 49° 30′ & 50°. There are many large lakes on the mtn. terraces & valleys. The Altaï covers, with its offsets, a large part of the Russian govs. Irkutsk, Yeniseisk, & Tomsk, & of W. Mongolia; on the S.W. it is connected with the great table-land of Chinese Turkestan; & the Irtish, Obi, Yenisei, & Selenga rivers all rise within its limits. The principal roads over the Altaï are—1. That from Irkutsk by Lake Baikal to Kiakhta, which is the chief route for the trade between Russia & China.—2. From Udinsk, on the Selenga, to the mining district of Nertchinsk, on the Shilka, a tributary of the Amoor. The mts. in the western range consist chiefly of granite & prim. rocks, with newer formations of porphyry intruded. The range of the Altaï is remarkable as the source of auriferous sands, of which it appears to afford an unfailing supply. Mines of gold, silver, & lead, appear to have been worked by the ancient inhabitants, & have been reopened & recently extensively wrought by the Russians. Sandstones, conglomerates, & chalk, rest on granite in the mountains surrounding Lake Baikal, & many parts of this range indicate volcanic agency. These mountains are rich in cornelian, onyx, topaz, amethyst, & other gems. The most productive mining district is immediately E. of Barnaul, many of its most important mines being near Krasnoyarsk. The mining district of Nertchinsk is less productive, yielding only one-fourth as much metal as that of Barnaul, a disproportion chiefly attributable to the scarcity of smelting materials. These mountain regions are fitted chiefly for pasturage, though many of the valleys contain ground suitable for agriculture. Its ancient inhabitants, named Tchudes, are now extinct, & have been succeeded by the present nomadic population.

It is meanly built; houses mostly of wood, and only of one story. The harbor, improved by a mole, is adapted only for small craft. Amaxichi is the residence of a Greek archbp. and of a Brit. governor. Opposite the town is an aqueduct, remarkable for its length, nearly destroyed by the late earthquake, and near it are remains of Cyclopean walls, probably those of the ancient Leucas.

AMAY, a town of Belgium, prov. Liege, on the Maese, on the Belgian railroad 15¼ m. from Liege. Pop. 2,470, many of whom emigrate yearly as brickmakers. Wine is extensively made.

AMAZON, MARANON, ORELLANA, or SOLIMOES, the chief riv. of S. America, and the largest in the world, whether regarded as to its volume, or the extent of its basin. It is formed by the union of the Maranon & Ucayale; the former rising in Lake Lauricocha (Peru), in lat. 10° 30′ S., lon. 76° 10′ W.; and the head stream of the latter, the Apurimac, originating about lat. 16°. S., lon. 72° W. Both rivs. have a general course at first northward; the Maranon, for the first 500 miles of its course, flows N.N.W. and at about lat. 6° S. bends eastward, and at lat. 4° 40′ takes an almost due east course, and after receiving the Huallaga from the S., (where it is 500 yards broad,) it pursues a course of 46¼ leagues, and joins the Ucayale, at lat. 4° 35′ S., lon. 74° W. Here the stream has depth sufficeint to float the largest class of ships. Thenceforth the Amazon flows generally E. to the Atlantic, which it enters nearly under the equator, and between lon. 48° & 50° W., its estuary widening until it is 180 m. across. Taking the Apurimac as its source, its direct length is estim. at 1,769 m., and including its windings, nearly 4,000 m.; for great part of which (viz. from the ocean to Pongo de Manseriche, lon. 76° 50′ W.), it is navig. & uninterrupted by any rapid or cataract. At least 20 noble rivers, navig. to near their sources, pour their waters into it, besides numerous other less important streams. Chief tributs. the Napo, Putumayo, Yapura, & Rio Negro, from the N.; the Yavari, Jutay, Jurua, Coary, Purus, Madeira, Tapajos, & Xingu, from the S. By the Casiquiaire, a branch of the Rio Negro, the Amazon has a direct and remarkable connection with the Orinoco. The Amazon and its tributs. afford an immense inland navig., estim. at 50,000 m.; and the extent of its basin has been computed at about two millions of sq. m., or about 2-5ths of the whole contin ent of S. America. The depth of the riv. is great; in mid current no bottom is found with 20 faths. The velocity of the current is pretty uniform, at the rate of 3¼ m. an hour. Tides ascend this riv. for 400 m. from the Atlantic—as far as Obidos, where the Amazon is still more than a mile in width—and near the full moon the rise of the tide occasions a formidable rush of water into the channel, sometimes bringing in several waves from 10 to 15 ft. in height. This phenomenon, called the bore, is witnessed on a smaller scale in the Ganges, and in some Europ. rivs. The upper part of the riv., as far as the mouth of the Yavari, which forms the boundary line betw. Brazil and Peru, is called Maranon; thence to the mouth of the Rio Negro it is called Solimoes or Solimas; and from the Negro to its mouth, Amazon. The tropical rains swell the riv. annually to 40 & 50 ft. above its ordinary level. The Maranon attains its greatest height in Jany., the Solimoes in Feby., the Amazon in the middle of March. In the lower part of its course, the Amazon abounds with isls., and in its estuary are Marajo & Caviana, of considerable extent. Santiago (Ecuador), S. Borja, S. Joaquim, Tabatinga, Olivenza, Matura, Serpa, Santarem, Montalegre, Para, Arayates, and Gurupa, are towns on its banks; but, with trifling exceptions, the whole country which it traverses is still in a state of nature. In 1848, a steam-boat made a passage from Para, up the river as far as the Negro. The estuary of the Amazon was discovered by Pinçon in 1500; in 1539, Francis d'Orellana sailed down it from the Napo, and it obtained its name of Amazon from his having reported that he had seen armed women on its shores.

AMERICA, one of the largest divisions of the world, extends from Point Barrow, lat. 71° 24′ N., to Cape Froward, the most S. Point of the continent on the Straits of Magellan, lat. 53° 53′ 43″ S. Horn Island, on which Cape Horn is situated, & the other islands of the archipelago of Tierra del Fuego, & which are considered as forming part of South America, stretch 2 degrees further South, viz., to 55° 58′ 41.″ Area, 15,000,000 sq. m. It consists of two vast peninsulas, called respectively North & South America, connected by the Isthmus of Panama or Darien, which is but 28 m. in breadth at its narrowest part. The entire length of the American continent in a straight line is 10,000 m. It greatest breadth S. of the equator is between Cape St. Roque in Brazil, & Cape Blanco in Peru, 3,250 miles, between lat. 4° & 7° S. North of the equator the greatest breadth is between the parallels of 45° & 50° N., a distance of 3,100 miles. It is bounded on the E. by the Atlantic Ocean, which separates it from Europe & Africa, & on the W. by the Pacific Ocean from Asia. At Behring Strait, 48 m. in width, is its nearest approach to Asia. The physical features of this great continent are on the most magnificent scale. Here are the largest rivers & lakes in the world; the most extensive valleys, & mountains only exceeded in height by a few peaks of the Himalayas. Here, also, the great range of the Andes furnishes the most noted example of linear volcanoes of any region in the universe. Of the 270 active volcanoes on the surface of the earth, 190 are on the shores & islands of America. Though differing considerably in general contour, the two great peninsulas present remarkable points of resemblance. Both taper towards their S. extremities, & the form of both seems to have been in a great measure determined by a system of mountains on the W. stretching from Tierra del Fuego to the Arctic Ocean, & on the E. by the mountains of Brazil in South America, & the Alleghany or Appalachian mountains in North America. Both, also, are to a great extent composed of three great river basins—N. America by those of the Mississippi, the St. Lawrence, & the Mackenzie; S. America by those of the La Plata, Amazon, & Orinoco. Besides the two great divisions of America above named, an intermediate, called Central America, is recognized, comprehending the narrow portion of the main land between the Isthmuses of Panama & Tehuantepec, & the islands composing the Columbian Archipelago or West Indies.

The aborigines of America, excepting the polar tribes of Esquimaux, are identified as one race by certain physical correspondencies, and form a distinct variety in the human family; while their languages have a common bond of union in grammatical structure. In relation to the whole of the western continent the aborigines are far outnumbered by the white race, and descendants from the continent of Europe. The following are the distribution of indigenous and foreign races:

Aborigines, or the copper-colored race.....	6,000,000
Europeans, and descendants of pure blood.....	40,000,000
Africans and descendants of pure blood.....	7,000,000
Races of mixed blood.....	10,000,000

America possesses 537 species of mammals, of which 57 belong likewise to other portions of the earth, leaving 480 species peculiar to the western hemisphere, viz.: Quadrumana, 82 species; Cheiroptera, 82; Carnivora, 140; Marsupialia, 18; Rodentia, 133; Edentata, 20; Pachydermata, 6; Ruminantia, 30; Cetacia, 26. All the Quadrumana, Edenta, and Pachydermata, belong exclusively to South America.

* The Bermudas properly belong to North America, but are classed here for convenience.

North America lies between the 16th degree of N. lat. & the Arctic Ocean. It is more irregular in form than S. America, but of greater uniform breadth, larger in area, & more deeply indented with gulfs, bays, & inlets. Two extensive elevations or mountain ridges extend near & parallel, the one to its E. & the other to its W. coast. Between these is a vast plain, the largest in the world, stretching from the Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Ocean. In this plain are situated the great lakes of N. America, & through it flow the rivers Mississippi, the Mackenzie, & the St. Lawrence, the one forming a S., the other a N., & the third an E. drain for its superfluous waters. Its coast indentations & inlets are Baffin Bay & Hudson Bay on the N.; the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the E. coast; the Gulf of Mexico on the S.; the Gulfs of California & Georgia, & Cook Inlet on the W. The coast of N. America is very extensive, extending in an irregular line from Davis Strait to the Florida Channel about 4,800 m., & from the latter along the inland sea to Tehuantepec about 3,000. The whole length on the Pacific side to Behring Strait is about 10,000 m. The extent of the N. & N.E. shores cannot probably be less than 3,000 m. The entire extent will thus be 22,800 m. The most remarkable physical characteristics of N. America are its sandy deserts, treeless steppes, & prairies; the first stretch along the base of the Rocky Mountains to the 41st degree of N. lat., having an average breadth of 200 to 500 m. The steppes form another cheerless & extensive region in the N. part of the continent. The prairies or savannahs, peculiar characteristics of N. America, are chiefly in the Mississippi valley. They consist of extensive & generally irregular tracts without trees, covered in the spring with bright verdure, intermingled with fragrant flowers. A vast extent is also occupied by forests, comprising, probably, not less than 600,000 sq. m.

Mountains.—Of these there are four principal systems in N. America. The Oregon or Rocky Mountains—a continuation of the Andes—the Sierra Nevada or Snowy Mountains of California, merging in its passage northward into the coast range, & the Alleghanies or Appalachian range, extending N.E. parallel with the coast. The Rocky Mountain range are a continuation of the Andes, forming the elevated table land passing centrally through Mexico; thence trending north, divide the waters entering the Pacific & Atlantic Oceans, & continue to the Arctic coast. Several peaks rise above the line of perpetual snows. The Sierra Nevada of California & coast range extend nearly parallel with the Rocky Mountain range, & are connected with the latter by several transverse ridges. The Alleghany range stretches along the E. portion of the continent. It rises in the gently undulating ridge dividing the waters of the Tennessee from those flowing into the Mississippi & the Gulf of Mexico, & trending across the country in the same general direction from S.W. to the N.E., & terminates in the headland of Gaspè.

Rivers & Lakes.—The principal rivers are the Mississippi, with its affluent the Missouri, & the St. Lawrence. The first is the largest river in N. America, & one of the greatest on the earth, occupying, with its tributaries, the whole of the S. portion of the great central basin of North America. It has its origin in the junction of streams formed on the eastern declivity of the Rocky Mountains, between lat. 42° & 50° N., & enters into the sea in the Gulf of Mexico in lat. 29° N. Its whole course, which is from N. to S., is calculated to exceed 4,400 miles. The St. Lawrence rises under the name of the St. Louis, in lat. 47° 45′ N., lon. 93° W.; entering Lake Superior, it flows a S.E. & a N.E. course, & enters the Gulf St. Lawrence at Cape Gaspè, where it has expanded to 100 miles in width. The Mackenzie issues from the Great Slave Lake, from which it flows nearly due N., & enters the Arctic Sea, lat. 69° 10′ N. In the number & magnitude of its lakes N. America is unequalled. They form one of its most noted features, & in conjunction with its rivers, present a medium of commercial intercourse wholly unsurpassed. The principal are Lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, & Ontario, which together cover an area of 100,000 sq. m. Following the chain of lakes which crosses the country in a N.W. direction, there occur Lakes Winnipeg, Woolaston, Deer Lake, Athabasca, Great Slave L., & Great Bear L. The Great Salt Lake in Utah, & Mono L. & L. Chapola in Mexico. There are, besides these, many smaller yet considerable bodies of water, viz., St. Clair, midway between Lakes Huron & Erie; the Lake of the Woods, between Lakes Superior & Winnipeg; Neppissing, Simcoe, Champlain, & many others of lesser magnitude.

Islands.—In the Atlantic Ocean the principal are Newfoundland, Anticosti, Prince Edward Island, & Cape Breton, all lying at the embochure of the St. Lawrence; Nantucket, Long Island; the Bahama Islands, off the coast of the Carolinas; & the Columbian Archipelago, comprising the islands of Cuba, Hayti, Jamaica, Porto Rico, Santa Cruz, Antigua, Guadaloupe, Martinique, St. Lucia, Barbadoes, St. Vincent, Tobago, Trinidad, & other small islands. On the N.W. coast the principal are the California group; Vancouver, Queen Charlotte, Prince of Wales, Sitka, & Admiralty Islands; & on the extreme N.W. the Aleutian group. In the Arctic Ocean there are a vast number of islands of which but little is yet known.

Geology, Mineralogy, &c.—A remarkable analogy exists in the structure of the land in N. America & Central & N. Europe. Gneiss, mica, schist, & granite prevail over wide areas in the Alleghanies on the Atlantic slope & the N. latitude of the American continent, & in the high & middle latitudes the silurian strata extend over 2,000 m. Crystalline & Silurian rocks form the substratum of Mexico, for the most part covered with plutonic & volcanic formations & secondary limestne. The Rocky Mountains are mostly silurian, except the E. ridge, which is of stratified crystalline rocks, amygdaloid, & ancient volcanic productions. The coast range has the same character, with immense tracts of volcanic rocks, both ancient & modern, especially obsidian. In N. America volcanic action is entirely confined to the coast & high land along the Pacific. The principal minerals are gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, & coal. The first three are found in greatest abundance in Mexico, where there are nearly 3,000 mines of gold & silver alone. Since 1848 the great field for gold gathering has been California, where large quantities have been obtained, & both silver & quicksilver have been found to abound. The silver supplied by the Mexican veins is extracted from a great variety of minerals, pure or native silver being of comparatively rare occurrence. The principal deposits of gold in the United States besides California, occur in the primary rocks of the S.E. declivity of the Alleghanies. The coal fields are of prodigious extent, the Appalachian stretching without interruption 720 miles, with a maximum breadth of 280, & occupying an area of 63,000 sq. m. The Pittsburg seam, 10 feet thick, exposed on the banks of the Monongahela, extends horizontally 225 m. in length & 100 in breadth, & covers an area of 14,000 sq. m. Besides the coal fields named, there are various others of great extent in different parts of N. America, including New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, & Vancouver Island. Iron is also extensively worked. Salt is widely diffused throughout the continent.

Climate.—The predominating character of the climate of N. America is intense cold, although in some parts an oppressive heat prevails during a portion of the summer. Above the 50th degree of lat. the cold is so severe as to render the country all but uninhabitable, while frosts occasionally occur as low down as the 30th degree of lat. In winter a keen & piercing N.W. wind prevails throughout all N. America, adding greatly to the rigor of the N. climate, & carrying its chilling influence into the more southerly regions. The transitions from cold to hot, or from winter to summer, are very sudden, especially in Canada. Among the causes of a lower temperature than obtains in Western Europe, may be mentioned the small portion of the continent lying in the Torrid Zone, the Rocky Mountain range, & also the Sierra Nevada mountains near the Pacific Ocean, prevent the warm winds from the Pacific penetrating the interior; the great expansion of the land N. & N.E., & the almost level plain in those directions, allow full scope for the piercing Arctic blasts. The narrowness of the Gulf stream, & the prevailing winds taking the same general course, carry away from this continent the hot circumambient air, a source of warmth to Western Europe; & the cold polar oceanic current brings down the icebergs of Spitzbergen & Greenland to the shores of Labrador & Newfoundland. The same causes will elucidate the well-known fact of the average temperature on the coast of the Pacific being higher than at the corresponding parallels on the Atlantic coast. (See Article United States of America.)

Vegetation.—The forests of N. America are of vast extent, covering an area of 600,000 sq. m. Maize or Indian corn, the farinaceous plant peculiar to America, has a very extensive range. Millet, cocoa, pimento, vanilla, copaiba, cinchona, jalap, sassafras, nux vomica, tobacco, & the cochineal plant coccus cochenillifer's, &c., are also indigenous. So likewise is the potato, now so widely diffused throughout the world. Wheat, barley, oats, peas, & rice succeed well throughout large portions of the continent. So also do the various kinds of fruit trees; the apple, the peach, & the pear are produced in the greatest perfection, & in the Southern parts, lemons, oranges, &c. Sugar, coffee, & cotton, are staple productions. The vine of native sorts flourish profusely, & many of the exotics thrive well; the tea plant has been tried, but hitherto without much success.

Races of Men.—The origin of the American race is unknown. It is, however, certain that America was inhabited by a people who lived long antecedent to the present races or tribes, & regarding whom neither history nor tradition have preserved any very satisfactory record, although many evidences remain to prove the fact of their having existed, & that they had attained a degree of civilization altogether superior to the present Indian race. Amongst these evidences are walls of regular masonry & hearths of brick, medals of copper & silver, & implements of iron. The various tribes of America, with the exception, perhaps, of the Esquimaux, have all a strong resemblance to each other in physical formation, so as to leave no doubt of their being of one family, & their having a common origin. They are, with the exception just made, of large size, robust & well proportioned; of a brown or reddish complexion; black hair, long, coarse, & shining; low forehead, high eyebrows, prominent cheek bones, nose a little flattened, but well marked, head of a square shape, face broad, & tapering towards the chin, features, viewed in profile, prominent & deeply marked. The aborigines of N. America have been considered an inferior race intellectually, & have not, perhaps, made advances in general civilization or in the arts commensurate with their opportunities; but to change the habits & modes of life of a nomadic people, not from one stage of refinement to another, but from a state of nature with its freedom & excitement to a fictitious one, with its constraints, its monotony, & to the Indian incomprehensible motives of action, is not the work of a day nor of a century. Yet manifestations of advancement are not wanting, especially of those tribes occupying the Indian territory of the United States, where they have attained a station & a pre-eminence in advance of all other known tribes or nations of the American aborigines. A large portion of N. America is still in possession of the aboriginal tribes, comprising the N. parts of Mexico, the W. parts of the United States, & the N.W. parts of British America. Their entire numbers are supposed to amount to rather more than half a million.

Political Divisions.—The great political divisions of N. America, exclusive of C. America, are the Republic of the United States of America, British America, Russ. America, & Mexico. The territory of the United States extends from the Brit. possessions to the G. of Mexico, & from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. British America comprises Canada West & Canada East, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Labrador, & the island of Anticosti. The boundary of Russian America, as settled by treaty in 1825, commences at the S. extremity of Prince of Wales Island, in lat. 54° 40′ N., & about lon. 132° W. The entire coast lying N. of this point, & all the islands off the coast, are recognized to be in the Russian territory. Mexico lies between 15° 30′ & 32° N. lat., extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean.

Discovery, Settlements, &c.—North America has a history of its own, entirely distinct in all its circumstances from that of South America, the scene of the discoveries of Columbus, & to which, so far as regards this continent, they were entirely confined. The first explorer of North America was John Cabot, a Genoese, who resided in England in the reign of Henry VII. He sailed from Bristol, Eng., accompanied by his son Sebastian, & on the 24th of June, 1497, discovered the North American coast of Labrador. This was a year before the discovery of S. America by Columbus, which took place in May, 1498. In the summer of 1498, Sebastian Cabot sailed from England with two ships, fitted out at his own & his father's expense, & directing his course by Iceland, reached Newfoundland, which he called Terra de Baccalaos, from the great numbers of fish seen. The next adventurer who reached the N. American shores was Gaspar de Corte-real, a Portuguese, who sailed for, & subsequently surveyed between 600 & 700 m. of the coast of Labrador, including a portion of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in the year 1,500. He returned to America shortly after, & having excited the enmity of the people by having carried off on his first voyage a number of natives, it is supposed that he & his ships' crews were destroyed, as they were never again heard of. A similar fate befel his brother, who sailed in search of him in the following year.

In 1512, Sebastian Cabot sailed again for America, with a small squadron under the command of Sir Thomas Pert, fitted out by Henry VIII., but a mutiny on board his vessels, together with a want of resolution on the part of the commander, compelled him to return before more had been accomplished than a visit to Hudson Bay. In the same year, Florida was discovered by Ponce de Leon. In 1513 the Pacific Ocean was first seen by Balboa, from the mountain tops near Panama. The next name that occurs in the history of American discovery, is that of Giovanni Verazzano, a Florentine navigator, who was sent out by Francis I. of France, in the year 1524, & who surveyed upwards of 2,000 m. of coast, comprising the most of that of the United States, with a large portion of that of Brit. America. Verazzano gave the name of New France to the region he had discovered. In a subsequent voyage he & his party were surrounded by the savages & put to death. Ten years afterwards, Jacques Cartier, a seamen of St. Malo, sailed from that place for Newfoundland, the N. coast of which he surveyed & minutely described. He performed several voyages afterwards, in one of which he entered the St. Lawrence, being the first European who had ascended the r. An attempt was afterwards made by the Sieur Roberval to form a settlement in America, but the attempt was unsuccessful, the only result being a fort which the French erected near the present site of Quebec, & named Charlesbourg. This fort, however, was the first European settlement formed in that part of America. Roberval & his brother sailed on another voyage of discovery some time after, & is supposed to have perished. Previous to this, the Spaniards had conquered Mexico, & a desire to extend their dominion in a N. direction, led to further discoveries in N. America. The coast of California was discovered by Ximenes, a pilot, who, with Mendoza, a captain, whom the former murdered during the voyage, had been dispatched by Cortez on a voyage of discovery. In 1539, the Gulf of California was first ent. by Francisco de Ulloa, sent out by Cortez, who spent a year in examining its coasts & havens. 1587, Davis Strait ent. & named by John Davis, in search of a N.W. passage. The Spaniards made several voyages along the Pacific coast, but were not attended by any results worthy of notice, until the years 1596 & 1602, when Sebastian Viscaino proceeded along the coast as far N. as lat. 46°. These discoveries were followed by those of Davis in 1585, Weymouth in 1602, Knight in 1606. Hendrick Hudson in 1611 ent. Hudson Bay; he had previously disc. & explored the noble riv. now bearing his name. In the great inland sea of the N., also called after him, he was abandoned in an open boat by a mutinous crew, & perished. Button in 1612, Bylot & Baffin in 1615, from the latter of whom Baffin Bay has been named. The first, in point of time among the more modern voyagers on the shores of N. America, were Capt. Behring & Lieut. Tchirikow, both natives of Russia, who were sent out in 1725 by the Empress Catharine to survey the N. coasts. They made several important discoveries, besides setting at rest the disputed point whether Asia & America were two separate continents. The claims of Russia to the American coast N. of lat. 55°, is founded on the voyages of these two navigators. In 1699, the ent. to the Mississippi r. first explored by the French. In 1776, Capt. Cook traced the N.W. coast from lat. 50° N. to Cape Prince of Wales. The remaining names associated with American maritime discovery, are Meares, Vancouver, Gray, Kotzebue, & more recently, Ross, Parry, Franklin, De Haven, & Beechy. Inland travellers & discoverers, Hearne, M'Kenzie, Back, Rae, & Simpson, most of whom have published accounts of their discoveries. (See Arctic Ocean, United States of America, & Canada.)

Central America, is the narrow body of land which unites the continents of N. & S. America, extending from the Isthmus of Darien or Panama, to the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, & should properly include the Columbian Archipelago, or West India islands. Its entire continental length is about 800 or 900 m., with a breadth varying from between 28 to 300 or 400. Taking the limits above stated, Central America will be found to comprise the Isthmus of Panama, the republics of Costa Rica, Nicaragua, San Salvador, Honduras, & Guatimala. The Balize, & parts of Mexico, comprising the states of Chiapas, Tobasco, & Yucatan. It is bounded E. & N.E. by the Caribbean Sea & the Gulf of Mexico; S. & S.W. by the Pacific Ocean. It is traversed throughout its whole length by a range of mntns. which connect the Andes of S. America with the mntn. ranges of Mexico. This range is divided into three groups, the Costa Rica group, the Honduras, & Nicaragua group, & the group of Guatimala. The Costa Rica group traverses the Isthmus of Panama; some peaks attain an elevation of 9,000 ft., & the volcano of Irasu rises to 11,478 ft., & there are others reputed to be of still greater height. The more general elevations however, are from 3,000 to 5,000 ft. The Honduras & Nicaragua group is separated from the former by the lake of Nicaragua, & the river San Juan. On the N. side of the lake, the border of the plateau forming its W. limit, rises abruptly to a height of 8,200 ft. The Guatimala group is remarkable for containing the greatest number of active volcanoes known to exist within similar limits on the surface of the globe. The highest in Central America is Agua, which is said to attain an elevation of 15,000 ft. The others vary from 1,000 to 11,000 ft., but a few only of these heights have been ascertained. The volcano of Agua (water), has obtained its name from its emitting, when in action, torrents of water, & stones, instead of fire. The mountains of Central America do not generally attain an elevation equal to those of the two adjoining continents, with exception of the volcanoes. The coasts are generally narrow, & in some places the mountains & high lands rise abruptly from the water's edge. The rivers of this territory are small, & have necessarily, from the narrowness of the land, short courses, the longest not exceeding from 200 to 300 m., while many of them are not more than 50. Of the latter, are those that fall into the Pacific, of the former, those that enter the Gulf of Mexico & Caribbean Sea, both having their sources in the mountainous regions of the country, the one flowing N.E. & the other S.W. The largest river is the Usumasinta, which flows into the Gulf of Mexico, & the next in volume is the Monagua, entering the Bay of Honduras. There are about 30 other rivs., some of which are navigable for several miles into the interior. The principal lake is that of Nicaragua, connected by the San Juan r., which has been made navigable, with the Caribbean sea. This lake is 100 m. in length, & about 50 m. in breadth. The other considerable lakes are those of Managua or Leon, Golfo Dolce, Golfete, Peten, Alitan, Amatitlan, Guija, & Conjutepeque.

Climate.—The climate is exceedingly various, owing to the inequality of its surface. The plains on the coast of the Caribbean sea are exposed to violent tropical heats, & are very unhealthy, but on the table lands any temperature according to altitude may be obtained all the year round, with a salubrious climate. The dry season lasts from Oct. to May, the rest of the year is called the wet season, although the rain falls during the night only, the days being clear & cloudless, & the air pure & refreshing. In March & April the thermometer sometimes rises to 86°, but usually ranges between 74° & 82° in the middle of the day.

Vegetable Productions.—These are as various as the climate; on the higher parts of the table land, the grains, fruits, & vegetables of the U. S. & Europe are raised. There are here, likewise, plantations of a kind of aloe called maguey, from which a spirituous liquor called pulque is extracted. The lower & warmer districts produce, in great abundance, Ind. corn, sug.-cane, bananas, mandioca, all sorts of tropical fruits, including the cherimoga, said to be the most exquisite of fruits, & sweet potatoes, indigo, cochineal, tobacco, & cotton. The forests which are very extensive, produce mahogany, pimento, sarsaparilla, vanilla, & the black balsam, commonly called the Peruvian balsam, with various other drugs, gums, & valuable woods, including logwood, & lignum vitæ. The forests of Panama contain about 100 different kinds of trees, which grow luxuriantly in its moist, hot climate.

Geology, Minerals, &c.—Of the geology of Central America little is known. Granite, gneiss, & mica slate form the sub-strata of the country, but the abundance of igneous rocks bear witness to strong volcanic action both in ancient & in modern times. Gold, silver, iron, lead, & mercury are found, but the first three only are worked. Jasper & marble are worked in Honduras, & brimstone is collected near the volcano of Quezaltenango. There are also many salt springs, & salt is procured in large quantities on the shores of the Pacific.

Inhabitants.—The population of Central America consists of three classes:—whites & creoles, mestizoes, or the offspring of whites & Indians, & aboriginal natives. The proportions of this pop. have been estimated at one-twelfth whites, four-twelfths mixed races, & seven-twelfths Indians.

History.—In 1502, Columbus landed on the E. coast of Central America, passing along the shores of Honduras, the Mosquito territory, Costa Rica, & Veragua, when the clamors of his crew, the fierce resistance of the natives, & the crazy state of his ships, compelled him to return. In 1503, two or three years after the conquest of Mexico, Cortez despatched Pedro Alvarado, one of his most distinguished officers, to subdue Central America, which he effected in two years. From that period it remained subject to Spain till 1821, when it was formed into a federal republic, & became independent. The confederacy comprised the states of Guatimala, Nicaragua, Honduras, Salvador, & Costa Rica. It existed till 1839, when it was dissolved, & each state has since formed an independent republic.

The idea of opening a passage through the Isthmus of Panama to accommodate the great traffic of the Atlantic & Pacific oceans, & thereby avoiding a dangerous & circuitous navigation round Cape Horn, is so obvious, that it excites no surprise to learn that it has been entertained for nearly three centuries. During that time, however, no attempt was made to accomplish this desirable object, with the exception of the road made for the passage of laden mules, until the present time;—when, in the course of events of the last few years, the U. S. of America, having enlarged its territory on the Pacific coast, it became necessary to establish a rapid communication with the extreme parts of the republic. To this end, the Isthmus of Panama was the point selected to cross the continent, & the citizens of the "Great Republic," to accomplish this object, brought into acquisition the mighty power of steam, as they were the first to apply it to the navigation of rivs. & the ocean, & the iron horse now traverses the land between the great waters, in the short space of two hours! From the port of San Juan on the Caribbean sea, steamers now ascend the r. San Juan, thence across the Lake of Nicaragua, & by land transit to the shore of the Pacific, passengers & freight are transported with much rapidity; there is a project to build a railroad across the Isthmus of Chiquimula, to connect the waters of the bay of Honduras with the Pacific ocean; still another is to cross the Isthmus of Tehuantepec either by canal or r. r., which will doubtless soon be accomplished, & a mail route has been put in operation across Mexico from Vera Cruz to Acapulco.

South America is a vast peninsula of a triangular form, with its apex S., extending from lat. 12° 30′ N. to Cape Horn in lat. 55° 58′ 41″ S., a distance from N. to S. of 4,800 m. Its greatest breadth from E. to W. is 3,230 m.; about three-fourths of it lie between the tropics; the remainder in the temp. zone. Its coast lines, particularly the W., are comparatively little broken or interrupted by indentations, excepting towards the S. extremity, where considerable inequalities occur on both E. & W. shores. Here also is a group of mountainous isls., forming the archipelago of Terra del Fuego. They are penetrated in every direction by bays & narrow inlets, ending often in glaciers formed from the descending ice & snow from the summits of mtns., some of which are elevated 6,000 ft. in height.

The mountainous & elevated tracts of this continent chiefly border on the Pacific & Atlantic coasts, the intervening space being mostly occupied by a wide & level plain, or rather a series of plains.

Mountains and Volcanoes.—There are four mountain systems in S. America, the most remarkable of which is the Andes, stretching along the W. coast from S. to N. in one continuous line of 4,180 m. in length, in an almost direct course from the Straits of Magellan to the Isth. of Panama. They are of inconsiderable width, but attain great elevations, the culminating point being the Peak of Aconcagua, 23,910 ft. in height. The second system is that of Parima, also called the highlands of Guayana, consisting of numerous irregular groups of mountains scattered over a table land, which extends 600 or 700 m. from E. to W., separating the plains of the lower Orinoco from those of the Rio Negro & the Amazon, & which is not more than 2,000 ft. above the sea. The mountain group extends from the parallels of lat. 3° to 8° N., & from the meridians of lon. 58° to 68° W. The culminating points of this system are the Maravaca, about 10,500 ft. high, & the Duida, 7,142 ft. high. The third system is known under the general name of the coast range of Venezuela, the N. spur of which contains the culminating point—the Silla de Caracas, which attains an elevation of 8,600 ft. The fourth is that of Brazil, which consists of two great ranges running parallel to the coast at various, but not very great distances from the sea, & its numerous ridges diverge & pass far into the interior, subsiding into gentle elevations, are lost in the vast plains. The higher mountains of Brazil extend generally like the Andes from S. to N., those of the interior form a ridge, whose chief direction is from E. to W. The culminating point of the mountains in Brazil, is Itambe, 5,960 ft. in height.

There are, altogether, upwards of 30 volcanoes in S. America in a state of activity. They all belong to the Andes, & consist of three separate & distinct series; the series of Chili, of Peru & Bolivia, & of Quito. The loftiest is Gualatieri, or Sehama, lat. 20° 13′ S., lon. 69° 17′ W., height 22,000 ft.; the heights of the others vary from 13,000 to 18,000 ft. The latest eruption occurred in 1831, with the volcano Pichincha, one of the Quito series, lat. 0° 12′ S., lon. 78° 50′ 30″ W.

Plains.—The plains of S. America extend for many hundreds of miles without exhibiting a perceptible inequality. In the rainy season they display a surface of beautiful green, but in the dry season assume the appearance of a desert. These immense plains are variously designated, the Pampas of Buenos Ayres, the Silvas of the Amazon, & the Llanos of the Orinoco & Venezuela. The Pampas of Buenos Ayres are about 900 m. in breadth, occupy a surface of 315,000 sq. m., & are elevated about 1,000 ft. above the sea. Marked by its vegetation & other characteristics, from E. to W., it has four distinct regions, the first of which extends 180 m. W. from Buenos Ayres, is covered with thistles & lucerne of the most vivid green so long as the moisture from the rain lasts; the second, extending 450 m., is covered with long grass, intermixed with flowers; the third is a tract of swamp & bogs; the fourth, a border of thorny bushes & dwarf trees reaching to the Andes. The grassy plains of the level territory, are occupied by thousands of wild cattle & horses, who find there inexhaustible supplies of food. The Silvas of the r. of the Amazons, lying in the centre of the continent, form the second division of the S. American lowlands. They are covered with wood (hence their name), & so densely, that the country can be penetrated only by sailing up the river or its tributaries. They extend 1,500 m. along the Amazon, varying from 350 to 800 m. The Llanos of the Orinoco & Venezuela form the third division of the S. American lowlands. They occupy 153,000 sq. ms. between the deltas of the Orinoco & the r. Coqueta, & are perfectly flat. They are nearly destitute of trees, excepting the banks of the Orinoco, which are thickly wooded. The Llanos present very different aspects at different seasons of the year. Soon after the termination of the rainy season in October, & the subsidence of the swollen rivers, they are clothed with fine grass, affording abundant pasturage to the countless herds which roam over their surface. But in the dry season, viz., between November & February, they are converted into desolate wastes; vegetation & the waters are dried up, & the earth is rent in deep & wide crevices.

Besides these three great level tracts of country, there is the desert of Patagonia, occupying 1,600,000 sq. m., the most barren of all the plains in S. America, being for the most part composed of sterile sand dunes, intermixed with stones & gravel, occasionally diversified by huge boulders, tufts of brown grass, low bushes armed with spines, & by lakes incrusted with salt. The climate is very cold, especially S. from lat. 47° S., & is subject to great & sudden changes of temperature.

Rivers.—The principal rivers in S. America are the Amazon, the Orinoco, & the Plata. The first is the largest river in volume on the globe. It rises on the table land of Pasco, in Lake Lauricocha, & after a course of 4,000 m. enters the Atlantic at the equator, in about lon. 50° W., & is 90 m. wide at its mouth. It is navigable for about 2,200 m. from the sea. The Orinoco rises nearly in the centre of the Parima Mountains, but its extreme sources have been but partially explored. Its length is estimated at 1,380 m. The affluents of the Orinoco are numerous, & some of them very large streams. It is connected with the Amazon through one of its affluents (the Rio Negro) by a natural canal, called the Cassiquiare, presenting in this connection one of the most remarkable phenomena of physical geography. The Plata is not so much a river as an estuary, formed by the confluence of the rivers Parana & Uraguay. It is about 185 m. in length, & at its junction with the sea is about 130 m. in width. Its navigation is difficult, owing to its strong, irregular currents. Its waters are very turbid. There are a number of other rivers in S. America, viz., San Francisco, the Rio Negro, Colorado, Essequibo, &c.

Lakes.—The Lakes of any considerable size are few, & with the exception of the Lake Titicaca, are rather vast morasses than lakes; the large inland water in Venezuela called the Lake of Maracaybo being an arm of the Caribbean Sea. The Lake Titicaca is situated partly in Bolivia & partly in Peru, & covers an area of above 4,000 sq. ms., is elevated 12,795 ft. above the sea, & said to be 120 fathoms in depth. Some of the temporary lakes are alternately inundated & dry, or in a marshy state, cover, when flooded, vast tracts of country; that of Xaragos on both sides of the Paraguay, & nearly in the centre of the continent, extends over 36,000 sq. ms. In the elevated mountain valleys & table lands of the Andes, there are many small lakes of the purest water.

Climate.—South America is more temperate than we should be led to expect from its geographical position, a result produced by the operation of the trade winds, atmospherical influences of that immense mountain range, the Andes, & other physical causes. In the steppes of the Caracas, the hottest region, the temperature of the air during the day averages about 92° in the shade. Throughout the whole basin of the Amazon, which comprehends between 2,000,000 & 3,000,000 sq. ms., the climate is neither very hot nor unhealthful, though under the equator. This arises from its being shaded by lofty woods, & from the prevalence of a cool easterly breeze, a branch of the trade wind which ascends the valley of the Amazon, nearly to the base of the Andes. Brazil, & the country extending westward from it, enjoys also an equable & temperate climate. At Rio Janeiro the mean temperature is only about 74°. At Lima the temperature varies from 53° to 82°, but the mean for the whole year is only 72°. At Buenos Ayres the mean annual heat is 68°; & in the Straits of Magellan the temperature of the warmest month does not exceed 43° or 46°, while snow falls almost daily. On the W. coast there is a rainless district of nearly 1,000 m. in length from N.W. to S.E. It lies between lat. 7° & 32° S., & lon. 65° & 68° W.

Geology & Mineralogy.—Granite forms the base of the whole continent, having gneiss here & there associated with it; but mica schist is the most common of the crystalline rocks. Quartz rock is much developed, generally mixed with mica, & rich in gold & specular iron. The Pampas of Buenos Ayres are entirely alluvial. Granite prevails to the extent of 2,000 m. along the coast of Brazil, & with syenite, forms the base of the table land. The superstructure of the latter consists of metamorphic & old igneous rocks, sandstone, clayslate, limestone, in which are large caverns, with bones of extinct animals; and alluvial soil. Porphyry & red sandstone abound all over the Andes. Chili is famous for its mines of gold, silver, & copper. The province of Minas Geraes, in Brazil, is likewise, as its name implies, exceedingly rich in mines. Several valuable gold mines are here wrought, & there are some valuable gold & silver washings in Brazil & some other parts of S. America. The entire produce of the gold & silver mines of S. America has been recently estimated at between $15,000,000 & $20,000,000. Brazil produces more diamonds than any other country.

Vegetation.—Extending through so large a space, & possessing in consequence so great a variety of climate, no special character can be given to the vegetation of S. America. As in the case of N. America, the most distinguishing feature of the former is its prodigious forests, which cover about two-thirds of the whole continent. The trees are various, and many of them, even the largest, are adorned with the most brilliant flowers. Throughout the whole of tropical America, vegetation is on the grandest scale, combined with great beauty & fruitfulness. In these regions, where there are due proportions of heat & moisture, the magnitude of the trees & the splendor of the flowers are extraordinary. "Individual plants," says Humboldt, "languishing in hot houses, can give but a very faint idea of the majestic vegetation of a tropical zone." Fruits also abound, including oranges, limes, cocoa nuts, pine apples, mangoes, bananas, pomegranates, mammoons, goyabas, jambas, aracas, mangabas, & many others. South of the Equator are found the quassia bitter, the fragrant tingee-bean, the rosewood, & the cinchona tree, the rind of which is what is called Jesuits' bark, & indigo, coffee, sugar cane, maize, & the cocoa tree. The cultivation of tea has been attempted in Brazil, though hitherto with little success; but those engaged in it are still in hopes that they shall ultimately be successful. Further S., in Patagonia, vegetation gradually loses its tropical character, & finally assumes the aspect of northern vegetation.

Races of Men.—As elsewhere remarked, there exists a very striking general physical resemblance between the native inhabitants of America, throughout the whole of both continents, from Cape Horn to Behring Strait. They are almost all of a reddish brown or copper color, with long black hair, deep set black eyes, aquiline nose, & often of handsome slender forms. In S. America many are half civilized, but a greater number are still in a wild state. The aboriginal population of Chili, known generally by the name of Arancanos, are more advanced in civilization than the Indians of the Pampas. They associate in small communities, have fixed residences, cultivate the ground, & subsist chiefly on the produce of their labor. They excel in the art of weaving, & produce a woollen cloth, which for fineness of thread, evenness of weaving, durability, brilliancy of colors, & elegance of pattern, is almost unrivalled. The arts of spinning, weaving, & dyeing, are practiced solely by the women, who are by far the most industrious of the two sexes. They are a well-disposed people, have few of the vices of their race, & possess firmness & courage in a remarkable degree. They are, however, fond of spirituous liquors, & manufacture a kind of spirit called chicha, by fermenting different kinds of fruits, but chiefly apples. They possess no written language, nor any other means of putting their ideas on record. Their language is harsh, difficult to pronounce, & inexpressive. Like the other native races throughout S. America, they have been long acquainted with the art of working in metals, especially gold & silver.

The Pampas Indians are of a very dark complexion, with long, thick, coarse hair, which generally hangs loose over their shoulders. Their eyes are black, animated, scowling, and are placed widely apart; foreheads low and broad; faces flattish; high cheek bones, and large jaws; they have no beard, are of rather low stature, and ill made, but muscular and athletic. They are expert horsemen, and can slip round and suspend themselves under their horses' belly when at full speed, merely clinging by their hands and feet, and can regain their seat at pleasure, without checking the animals' speed. They are still in a very savage state, subsisting on raw animal flesh, and leading the roving life of hunters. They do not cultivate the ground, nor apply themselves to any sort of labor. In manner they are boisterous, and in disposition cruel and ferocious, settling their disputes with the knife, in the use of which they are singularly expert.

Of the aboriginal tribes that inhabited Brazil, there are said to have been no fewer than 200 distinct branches. A few of these may be named, and their principal physical and moral characteristics alluded to. The Tapuyas, robust, well-made, and copper-colored; long, sleek, black hair; paint themselves, and pierce the under lip for the purpose of introducing a ring or other ornament; the greater part of them said to have been cannibals. The Tupis or Tupinambas inhabit chiefly the coast, from the river Camaria to that of San Francisco. They also paint their bodies. The Cafusos, a mixture of Indians and negroes, remarkable for an extraordinary peculiarity in the hair of the head, which rises perpendicularly from the forehead to the height of a foot or a foot and a half, giving them a very strange and disagreeable appearance. The Puris, the most revengeful and vindictive of all the Indian races of Brazil. The Bolocudos, another cruel and savage race, inhabiting the territory lying between the Rio Dolce and the Rio Pardo. The Indians of Brazil are generally of a short or middle stature, and mostly of a robust and broad make. They all paint; complexion darker or lighter; skin fine, soft, and shining.

South of lat. 38° S. is the home of the Patagonian. The stature and bulk of this race, though still remarkable, have been much exaggerated. Their average height is about 6 ft.; heads and features large, hands and feet small, color dark copper brown; hair black, lank, and coarse. They lead a nomadic life, living in tents formed of poles and skins, and subsisting on the animals they kill.

Political Divisions.—S. America comprises the following republics, viz.—New Granada, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and Chili; the united provinces of La Plata, or Argentine Republic; the empire of Brazil; Paraguay, Banda Oriental, or Uraguay, Patagonia, Tierra del Fuego, Guayana, British, French, and Dutch, and the Falkland Islands.

Discovery.—The first discoverer of this continent was Columbus. He sailed from Spain in 1492, with an expedition fitted out at the expense of the queen, on the first of those voyages of discovery which have rendered his name immortal. On the 12th of October following, Columbus landed on an island, which he called San Salvador, and of which he took formal possession in the name of the Castillian sovereigns. Having explored this island, and taken in a supply of wood and water, he sailed in quest of further discoveries, and soon after found himself amongst a number of beautiful islands, three of which he visited. Santa Maria de la Concepcion, Fernandina, and Isabella, with the scenery of all of which he was enraptured. Prosecuting his adventurous voyage, he came in sight of the island of Cuba on the 28th of October. Of this island he took formal possession, giving it the name of Juana, in honor of Prince Juan. From Cuba he proceeded to Hayti or St. Domingo, to which he gave the name of Espanola, from an idea that the features of the country resembled those of Spain. Having left several of his crew here at their own request, Columbus set sail for Spain on January 4th, 1493. The illustrious navigator was received by Ferdinand and Isabella with every mark of honor and respect. A second voyage was proposed and eagerly seconded by the court of Spain. An expedition, composed of 17 sail, large and small, of which Columbus had chief command, left the Bay of Cadiz on September 25th, 1493. In this voyage, the principal discovery was the island of Jamaica. On May 30th, 1498, Columbus set sail from Spain with a fleet of six vessels, on his third voyage, and now added the island of Trinidad to his former discoveries. From thence he proceeded to the mouth of the Orinoco, where he landed, and thus achieved the honor of being the first discoverer of the continent of S. America. With a mind singularly susceptible of the liveliest impressions from a contemplation of the beauties of nature, Columbus expresses his admiration of that which this region revealed to him, in the following beautiful and simple language:—"The beauty of the new land far surpasses the Campina de Cordova. The trees are bright, with an ever-verdant foliage, and are always laden with fruit. The plants on the ground are high and flowering. The air is warm as that of April in Castile, and the nightingale sings more melodiously than words can describe. At night, the song of other small birds resounds sweetly, and I have also heard our grasshoppers and frogs. Once I came to a deeply enclosed harbor, and saw a high mountain that had never been seen by any mortal eye, and from whence gentle waters flowed down. The mountain was covered with firs and variously-formed trees, adorned with beautiful blossoms. On sailing up the stream, which empties itself into the bay, I was astonished at the cool shade, the crystal-like water, and the number of the singing birds. I felt as if I could never leave so charming a spot, as if a thousand tongues would fail to describe all these things, and as if my hand were spell-bound and refused to write." In 1502, he undertook a fourth voyage, but it was unattended by any remarkable results. He reached the coast of Honduras, and, subsequently, the Gulf of Darien; from which he returned to Spain, where he died in four years afterwards, namely, in 1506. The adventurer who followed next in the track of Columbus was Alonzo de Hojeda, a young, bold, and enterprising Spanish cavalier, who, inspired by a similar spirit with that which animated the great navigator, and partaking, in some degree, of his genius, fitted out, at his own expense, an expedition of four ships, with which he pursued the course taken by Columbus. Having reached the continent of S. America near the equator, he passed the mouths of the Esse quibo and Orinoco, examined the whole coast of Venezuela, as far as Cape Vela, and thus ascertained that the land along which he sailed was part of a continent. Hojeda was accompanied in this voyage by Amerigo Vespucci, a native of Florence, an experienced mariner, and a man of considerable talents and acquirements. On the return of the latter to Spain, in the year 1500, he published an account of his voyage, and, it is said, claimed the merit of being the first discoverer of the continent of S. America. His book was read with all the interest and avidity which its extraordinary disclosures were so well calculated to excite, and the author's name silently but indelibly affixed to the New World—an injustice to the memory of Columbus which it would have been gratifying to have seen repaired, but which it is now too late to attempt.

Brazil was discovered in 1500 by Vincent Yanez Pinçon, who had accompanied Columbus in his first voyage. Steering N., he explored the mouths of the Amazon; and, noting with amazement the immense body of water which it poured into the ocean, correctly inferred that so mighty a stream could be found only in a continent of great extent. Towards the close of the year above named, Roderigo de Bastedas explored the coast from Cape Vela, the point at which Hojeda's progress terminated, to Puerto del Reterte, where that of Columbus closed, and thus connected the intervening continent. In 1507, Pinzou and Juan Diaz de Solis, an able navigator, were sent out by the Spanish Government to explore the W. coast of S. America. Arriving on the shores of Brazil, beyond which discovery had extended but a little way, they followed the coast towards the S. as far as the 40th degree of S. lat., landing at various points, and taking possession of the country for the crown of Castile. Several adventurers of smaller note than those named sought to earn wealth and reputation by making discoveries in the New World, but without success.

AMIENS, Ambianum, an anc. city of France, cap. dep. Somme (& formerly of all Picardy), on the Somme, & on the North of France r. r., & at the junction of the Boulogne branch, 92 m. from Paris, 77 from Boulogne, & 139 from Brussels. Pop. 1853, 47,000. It has regular & clean streets, squares, & planted boulevards. Its gothic cathed., founded in 1220, is one of the finest in Europe. In the Hotel de Ville the treaty of "the Peace of Amiens" was signed, March 27, 1802. The citadel, built by Henry IV., publ. library with 50,000 vols., theatre, corn hall, museum, cavalry barracks, chateau d'eau, St. Michael's bridge, & the seminary of St. Acheul, are the other most conspicuous publ. edifices. Amiens is a bishop's see, & has a royal court, assize, & commercial tribunals, a royal coll., univ., academy, acad. of sciences, free school of design, & botanic garden. The Somme divides here into 11 branches, which are used to turn numerous mills for the manuf. of cotton velvets, cotton, linen, & woollen yarns, kerseymeres, & other woollen fabrics. It was the cradle of the cotton manuf. in France, which was established in 1773. There are also dyeing, bleaching, & chemical works, manufs. of beet-root sugar, & soap, tanneries, & paper mills. Amiens, is celeb. for its pâtées de canards. Barges of 40 or 50 tons come up the Somme to this city, which is the centre of an extensive general trade. Fairs three times yearly; one lasting 8 days from June 24th. The Spanish troops took the city by stratagem, a small body being disguised as peasants, March 10th, 1597. Amiens is the birth-place of Peter the Hermit, Gabrielle d'Estrées Ducange, & the astronomer Delambre.

AMSTERDAM, one of the most important cities of Europe, cap. of the prov. of N. Holland & of the kingdom of the Netherlands, is built in the form of a crescent, on the Amstel, at its entrance into the Y or Ye, lat. of W. Steeple 52° 22′ 5″ N.; lon. 4° 53′ 2″ E. Pop. 1850, 228,800, of whom 23,000 are Jews. The city is connected by railroad with Haarlem, Leyden, the Hague, Rotterdam, & also to Utrecht & Arnheim. It is built on piles of wood driven into the alluv. soil; & is divided into 2 parts by the Amstel, & intersected by numerous canals, which form 90 isls., communicating by 290 bridges. The streets, almost all ranged on the sides of canals, are well paved & lighted; the houses are built of brick & painted of different colors, & the numerous magazines filled with the most valuable produce of both Hemispheres, attest the riches of a city which has long possessed the commerce of the globe. Amsterdam is the seat of the administration of the marine, of which the magazines & building-yards are most extensive. Among its many scient. & literary estabs. may be noted the royal athenæum with 11 professors, a valuable library, a botanic garden, & theatre of anatomy; the royal academy of the fine arts, with 6 professors; the school of navigation; the royal institute of science, literature, & fine arts; the Netherlands soc. of arts & sciences, & the soc. of Felix Meritis. Amsterdam has an observatory, a cabinet of natural hist., a royal museum, with a splendid & unique collection of paintings. The most remarkable buildings are the Palais-royal, formerly the Hôtel de Ville, a magnif. monument of modern architecture, & the residence of Louis Bonaparte from 1808 to 1813; it is an immense stone structure, built upon 13,695 piles. The present hôtel de ville, formerly the admiralty, the mansions of the E. & W. India. Cos.; the buildings of the Felix Meritis soc.; the exchange, the arsenal, & the barracks, capable of lodging several thousand men. Among its many ecclesiastical edifices are the Oude Kerke (old ch.), & the Nieuw Kerke (new ch.), one of the finest in the kingdom. It has also a Scotch presbyterian & an episcopal church. It has, besides, many extensive charitable institutions. The port of Haarlem, the handsome bridge over the Amstel, the fine quays along the Y, & the vast basins, are also worthy of notice. Amsterdam, still justly considered one of the most commercial places in Europe, attained its greatest prosperity after the closing of the Scheldt in 1648, when it monopolized nearly all the commerce of the Indies. Its commerce decreased with the decline of the republic of Holland, by the opening of the Scheldt, & the rivalry of Antwerp & Rotterdam; but the magnificent ship canal, the most stupendous ever made, & the rail road, which now afford such facilities of communication with other parts of the kingdom & the adjoining countries, will probably soon restore it to its former prosperity. There is regular steam communic. between this city & Kampen, Enkhuizen, Harlingen, & Hamburg. The bank of the Nethlds. was estabd. here in 1814. Its industry comprises manufs. of woollen, cotton, linen, & silk fabrics, jewelry, & gold lace; it has sugar, borax, sulphur, & other refineries; soap, oil, glass, iron, dye, & chemical works; distilleries, breweries, tanneries, tobacco factories, and ship-building docks. Chf. imports, the products of the colonies & N. Europe, hides, linens, cotton, & woollen stuffs; hardwares, rock salt, tin plates, coal, &c. Chf. exports, the produce of the Nethlds., E. & W. India possessions, cheese, butter, &c.; & the produce of the country, with corn & linens from Germany, Span., Germ., & English wools: French, Rhenish, & Hungar. wines, brandy, &c. Amsterdam has a large transit, as well as insurance & bill-broking trade. About 250 or 260 large ships, belonging to Amsterdam, trade to the E. & W. Indies, the Mediterranean, & the Baltic, & 2,500 vessels enter the port annually. Imports amount to the value of $36,000,000, & exports to $32,000,000 ann.

ANAM or AN-NAM, an emp. of S.E. Asia, occupying the E. part of Further India, betw. lat. 10° & 23° N., & lon. 102° & 109° E.; comprising Cochin-China, Tonquin, & a part of Camboja; & having N. the Chinese provs. Quang-si & Yun-nan, W the indep. Laos & Siamese territs., & S. & E. the China sea & G. of Tonquin. Area estim. about 98,000 sq. ms. (?); & population at 5,194,000 (?), of whom 380,000 are supposed to be Christians. Surface generally fertile, rising progressively from the sea to the great mntn. chain separating Cochin-China from Camboja. Tonquin & Cambojah are alluvial plains of great fertility. The whole empire is well watered, & the country in many parts covered with dense forests, or carefully cultivated. Chief rivs. the Menam-Kong, forming the boundary on the side of Siam, & the rivs. of Tonquin, Sai-gon, & Hué. Climate healthy, the heat being tempered by sea breezes. Inhab. similar in race to the Chinese, with an intermixture of Siamese, Malays, & Moi, or dark negro race. Coasts generally bold, & abound with some of the best harbors in the world. Products, rice, sugar, cinnamon, cardamoms, pepper & other spices; indigo, dye-woods, iron-wood, teak, & other timber; varnish, gums, an inferior tea, bamboos, ivory, silk, copper, iron, & the precious metals. These articles, with edible birds' nests & pearls, form the principal exports. Impts., manuf. silks, porcelain, drugs, fine teas, & household utensils from China (but the Chinese trade with Anam is much less than with Siam); spices, sandal wood, & tin from the Malay penins.; opium from India; cottons from Canton & Singapore, & a few Brit. coarse woollens, with serges, camlets, iron, & arms from Europe. The king is said to monopolize the legal trade, in which five square-rigged ships are employed, on voyages to Canton, Batavia, & Brit. India. Ch. cities & seats of trade, Hué, the cap., Kecho (Tonquin), Sai-gon, & Fai-fo. The governm. is an hered. milit. despotism; the central administration is under six mandarins, heads of bureaux; & the provinces are each under a mandarin of the first or military class. Standing army was, some years since, between 40,000 & 50,000 men, besides the royal guards & 500 elephants. Navy includes about 200 gun-boats, 100 galleys, & 500 smaller vessels,—a large force; but the people have a maritime taste, & excel most Asiatics in ship-building. The popular religion is Buddhism. Before the French revol., the gov. of Louis XVI. made great endeavors to establish French ascendency in Anam; & by the efforts of the French residents, several of the cities were fortified in the European fashion, & European policy was introduced into the government. But these incipient reforms have since become obsolete; a more recent attempt, on the part of the French, to gain an ascendency, having also failed. The emperor sends presents, at stated periods, to the court of Pekin, which affects to consider Anam tributary to China, & invests its successive rulers with their sovereignty.

ANDES (Span. Cordillera de los Andes), the great mountain system of S. America, extending through 65° of lat., along its W. coast from Cape Horn to the Isthmus of Panama, with a breadth of from 40 to 400 m., forming along the highest part a length of 4,360 m., & covering with its immense elevated peaks, massive ranges, plateaus, & declivities, nearly a sixth part of that continent. From its S. extrem. the main ridge runs along the W. shore of Tierra del Fuego, & consists of rocky summits, rising in many places to 2,000 or 3,000 feet, the culminating point of this portion (Mt. Sarmiento), being 6,910 feet above the sea. The Patagonian Andes, which succeed those of the S. insular dist., run directly northward as far as lat. 42° S., flanked by rocky & mountainous islands in the Pacific, that seem to have been disunited from the mainland by volcanic agency. The extreme height of the Andes in this division is 8,030 feet. The Andes of Chilli, which follow, extend from lat. 42° to lat. 21° S., & some of their summits reach the height of 23,000 ft.; the mountain mass is here about 80 m. across, & toward the ocean is flanked by extensive plains from 1,200 to 2,000 feet above the sea level, from which it rises with a very steep acclivity. There are several passes across this ridge; the most important is that of the great line of road between the city of Buenos Ayres & Valparaiso on the Pacific Ocean. The Bolivian Andes, which form the central & most elevated portion of the system, extend northward from lat. 21° to 14° S., presenting one immense mass of rocks, extending in length over 7 degrees of lat., & in breadth from 200 to 250 m., the more elevated summits of which rise on the E. & W. edges of the plateau from 13,000 to 23,000 feet. In this section, also, the range (hitherto forming a single, undivided ridge), separates, about lat. 19° S., into 2 great longitudinal ridges, the E. called the Cordillera Real, & the W. the C. of the coast. These run parallel to each other, & bound the table-land of Desaguadero, elevated 13,000 feet above the sea, extending 500 m. in length, & from 30 to 60 in breadth along the top of the Andes, & enclosing the lake of Titicaca. N. of this, the Cordilleras re-unite in the mountain knot of Cuzco. The Peruvian Andes, separated from the Pacific by a sandy desert, 1,200 m. broad, extend from lat. 14° to 5° S., & detach two eastern offsets, one of which runs N.W. between the Maranon & the Huallaga rivers, & the other betw. the Huallaga & the Ucayali. The main range, termed the Cordillera of the Coast, runs W.N.W. in a direction parallel to, & about 50 m. distant from, the Pacific. The Andes of Quito commence at lat. 5° S., & run nearly due N. to the table-land of Quito, which is 200 m. long, 30 m. broad, elevated 9,600 feet above the sea, & surrounded by the most extensive series of volcanoes in the world. About lat. 1° N., is the mountain knot of los Pastos, containing several active volcanoes. On the E. side, lat. 2° N., is the great mountain mass of Paramo, from which extend 3 separate spurs—I. that of Suma Paz, going N.E. from lat. 2° to lat. 9° N., & rising to an elevation of 9,000 feet.—II. the range of Quindiu, N.N.E., between the Knots of Paramo & Antioquia.—& III. the range of Choco, between the rivers Cauca & Atrata. A low ridge extends on the W. of the Atrata, & gradually sinks as it approaches the Isthmus of Panama.

The Andes are composed partly of granite, gneiss, mica, & clay slate, but chiefly of greenstone, porphyry, & basalt, with limestone, red sandstone, & conglomerate. Salt & gypsum are also found, & seams of coal at a great elevation. The topaz, amethyst, & other gems, are abundant. Volcanoes are numerous in the Chilean Andes, where there are no less than nineteen in a state of activity; & the mts. of Ecuador consist almost altogether of volcanic summits, either now or formerly in active ignition. Of these, the most noted is Cotopaxi. In some of its eruptions flames rise 3,000 ft. above the edge of its crater, & the sound of its explosions has been heard, in favorable circumstances, at a distance of 550 m. Its form is most regular & beautiful; the summit forming a perfect cone, covered with an enormous bed of snow. Earthquakes generally accompany the volcanic eruptions, & are felt over all the adjacent continent. No portion of the globe is subject to such frequent & destructive earthquakes as the countries embosomed within the range of the Andes, & those lying betwen them & the Pacific ocean. The cities & towns of Bogota, Quito, Riobamba, Callao, Copiapo, Valparaiso, & Concepcion, have all at different times been more or less devastated by their agency. The Andes are celebrated for their mineral riches,—producing gold & silver in large quantities, with platina, mercury, copper, lead, iron, & tin. Humboldt estimated the annual products of the mines of the New World, at the commencement of the present century, at $43,500,000, about 8,700,000*l*. Mr. Jacob calculates the total product of the Amer. mines, including those of Brazil, during the 20 years terminating in 1829, at $379,937,731, or $18,996,845 yearly. By the returns for 1850, the amount of gold & silver coinage, & of silver bars, was as follows:—

Countries.	Gold.	Silver.	Total.
New Grenada...	$1,262,035	$214,645	$1,476,680
Peru.....	481,205	5,004,915	5,486,123

The limit of perpetual snow in the Andes reaches the height of 18,300 ft. in the W. Cordillera of Chile; near the equator it is 15,000 ft., & in the Bolivian Andes (lat. 21° S.), 17,000 ft. above the sea. The potato is cultivated in the Andes at an elev. of 9,800 to 13,000 ft. Wheat grows luxuriantly at a height of 10,000 ft., & oats ripen in the vicinity of L. Titticacca, at an elev. of 12,795 ft. The highest inhabited spot, is the farm of Antisana, 13,470 ft. above the sea. Glaciers are numerous in Tierra del Fuego, & on the W. coast of Patagonia. APENNINES (Ital. APPENNINO), Apeninus Mons, a long chain of mntns. which detaches itself from the Maritime Alps, in about lon. 9° E., having a general direction first from W. to E., nearly parallel with the Pennine & Leopontine Alps, from which it is separated by the valley of the Po. In about lon. 12° E. the chain turns toward the S., & traverses the Italian peninsula throughout its entire length to the Strait of Messina, separating near the S. extremity so as to embrace the gulf of Tarentum. The princip. branch traverses the kgdm. of Naples, separating the waters which flow to the Mediterranean from those which fall into the Adriatic & Ionian seas. The entire length of the chain is about 760 m. The Apennines often present rounded tops & a uniform crest, whence branches descend to the coasts, between which valleys, such as that at the mouth of the Tiber, open into extensive plains. But the S. slope of that part of the chain which bounds the gulf of Genoa, is composed of escarpments which rise abruptly from the sea. Among the detached portions of the Apennines are the mntns. of Piombino, in Tuscany, Mt. Albano, near Rome, & Mt. Vesuvius, near Naples. M. Bruguiere proposes to distinguish the mntns. in Sicily by the name of the Insular Apennines. None of the summits attain the limit of perpetual snow, although snow lies on Monte Corno during 9 months in the year. The culminating point of the Apennines is the Monte Cavallo or Monte Corno, in the Gran Sasso d' Italia, between the Abruzzo Ult. I. & II., 10,154 feet. The other principal summits are Mt. Cimone, in the N. Apennines, 6,976 ft., & Mt. Amaro, summit of the Monte Majella in the S. Apennines, 9,154 ft., but the chain in general is of much lower elev. The S.W. part of the chain is a vast volcanic region, comprising Vesuvius, the only active volcano on the continent of Europe, & many thermal springs. On the N. is the volcanic mass of Voltore near Melfi. The constitution of the chain is chiefly calcareous, primary rocks are found only at the two extremities, in Piedmont & Calabria. It is poor in metals; iron occurs in small quantities, & extensive saliferous depôts occur near Cosenza; but the celeb. marble of Carrara, Serravezza, & Sienna constitutes the chief riches of the Apennines. Below 3,200 ft. in elev., the flanks of the princip. chain are covered with a varied vegetation, of which the orange, citron, olive, & palm form the lower zone; but forests are rar in the Apennines. Above 3,200 ft. the mntns. ar. generally arid & devoid of vegetation.

The latter are mostly engaged in the manufs. of cotton goods from British yarn. In 1835, they had nearly 1,000 looms at work.

ARABIA (Arabistan of the Turks), the most westerly of the three great peninsulas of S. Asia, between lat. 12° 40′ & 34° N., & lon. 32° 30′ & 60° E. Bounded N. by Turkey in Asia, E. by the Persian gulf & the Gulf of Oman, S. by the Gulf of Oman & the Indian ocean, & W. by the Red Sea. On the N.E. it is connected with Egypt by the Isthmus of Suez, & is divided in two parts by the Tropic of Cancer. Length from N. to S. about 1,500 m.; average breadth, 800 m. Pop. 9,000,000. (See Turkish Empire.) Ptolemy subdivided the country into A. Petræa, "the stony;" A. Felix, "Araby the blest;" & Arabia Deserta; the first comprising its N.W. portion, with the peninsula of Sinai between the gulfs of Suez & Akabah: the second, the territory along the W. & S. coasts; & the last, all the rest of its extent: but this partition is unknown to the inhabitants & to Arab geographers. Its native subdivisions are the Bahr-el-Tour-Sinai (Desert of Mt.

Sinai), in the N.W.; the Hedjaz (Land of Pilgrimage), Tehama & Yemen, along the Red Sea; Hadramaut, skirting the Indian ocean; Oman (comprising the Muscat dominions), at its E. extremity; El-Hassa-Lachsa, or Bahrein, on the Persian Gulf; & lastly, Nedjed, comprising all the centre of the peninsula. The great desert zone, which stretches through Africa & Asia, consisting of the Sahara, a large part of Egypt & of Persia, Beloochistan, W. Affghanistan, N.W. India, most part of Chinese Turkestan & Mongolia, comprises also the greater part of Arabia, on which account much of the country is unknown. Its centre, in so far as explored by Europeans, is found to be a table-land, attaining in some places an elevation of 8,000 feet, sloping N.E. from a mountain chain prolonged from the Syrian Lebanon down to the Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb, whence another chain extends N.E. parallel with the ocean as far as Oman. Granite, flanked by limestone, forms the basis of these mountains, which are in general from 3,000 to 4,000 ft. high, but the peak of Jebelokkdar in Oman is 6,000 feet in elevation. All N., from Hedjaz to the Euphrates, is a continuous plain of moving sands, & a similar region occupies most of the S. half of the peninsula; mountain ranges in various directions traverse the central plateau, & the S.E. coast is lined by mountains of 5,000 feet in elevation; the shores are generally bare & uninviting, & a deficiency of water is almost universal; but wherever a small river irrigates the soil, there is a most luxuriant vegetation. The climate is the driest in the world; the dry season is prolonged during the entire year in the level parts; & the rainy season, which in general lasts from the middle of June to the end of September, & in Oman from November to the middle of February, occurs only in December & January in the N. deserts. The heat is excessive in the plains, but temperate in the mountainous regions of Yemen & Hadramaut, & the winters are rigorous in the elevated regions of Nedjed. The Simoom or Samiel, the hot wind of the desert, blows from the interior towards the coast in all directions. Vegetable products comprise maize, wheat, barley, millet, indigo, tobacco, the finest coffee, cotton, sugar, spices, tamarinds, dates, & numerous other fruits, balm, acacia, & various gums, resins, & drugs. Some valuable woods are produced, but Arabia has no forest, properly so called. The horse, which has been carefully bred here for several thousand years, forms an important branch of traffic. The wild ass of the desert is renowned for size & strength. The camel is the principal beast of burden, & the breed of Oman is celebrated for its beauty & fleetness; oxen, sheep, goats, & buffaloes, are the other domestic animals. Mineral products are little known, but understood to comprise the onyx, emerald, basalt, blue alabaster, iron, & silver. The inhabitants settled around the coast appear to have a distinct origin from the Bedwins or true Arabs, who are the traditionally reputed descendants of Ishmael, & wander with their flocks & herds, dwelling in tents, & subsisting partly by plunder. The Wahhabees, who form a distinct sect of Mohammedans, occupy the interior of the country, having subjected a great portion of it to their dominion at the commencement of the present century. Their capital is at Der'ayyah. Agricultural processes are very rude, & manufs. perhaps at a lower ebb than in any other semi-civilized country. The Bedwin women weave hair tent-covers, & bags; & coarse linen & woollen fabrics, rude matchlocks, lance heads, & other arms, copper & tinned vessels, are made on the W. & S. coasts, mostly by foreigners. In Oman, silk & cotton turbans, sashes, woollen & hair cloaks, canvas, arms, earthen jars, & gunpowder, are made; but most other manufactured goods are obtained from abroad, in return for the native produce. In spite of the backward condition of the population, the trade of Arabia is considerable, & large quantities of merchandise are brought by caravans & by sea from all the surrounding countries, partly for internal consumption, & partly for distribution among the numerous pilgrims & merchants who resort to the holy cities Mecca & Medina. Mocha & Loheia are centres of a large coffee trade. Muscat has lately risen to eminence as an entrepôt for the trade with India & the Persian Gulf, & dows or ships of a superior kind are built there, which occasionally perform voyages to India. Jiddah or Djidda, the port of Mecca, is the other principal commercial town. A part of Arabia is under Egyptian rule; other parts compose the imamats of Muscat & Yemen, the first-named of which is a dominion of some consequence. The rest of the country is shared among an uncertain number of petty states. The gov. of the Bedwins is strictly patriarchal in each of the numerous tribes. The religion of the country is Islamism, which had its origin here towards the end of the 6th century, replacing the Sabaism & Judaism which had previously been the prevailing forms of worship. The Arabic language, called vulgar, to distinguish it from that of the Koran, is used over all the N. of Africa, & extends even to the S.E. of Asia, being among the most widely spread on the globe. The literary Arabic is still used in the liturgy of all Mussulmans. It was long the language of the sciences, arts, & civilization, & its literature is the richest of all the ancient nations of the East. Literature & the arts are now almost unknown to the present semi-barbarous race of inhabitants. For further details see Jomard, Histoire de l'Egypte, sous Moh. Aly, Paris, 1847, & M'Culloch's Geog. Dictionary.

ARBOS, a town of Spain, on rt. b. of the Foix, prov. & 22 m. N.E. Tarragona. Pop. 1,200. It was burned by the French in 1808, in revenge for its brave resistance.

ARBROATH or ABERBROTHWICK, a parl. bor., sea-port, & pa. of Scotl., co. Forfar, at the mouth of the Brothwick, in the North Sea, 16 m. N.E. Dundee, & 15 m. E.S.E. Forfar, with both of which it is connected by r. r. Area of pa. 1,820 ac. Pop. 10,030; of parl. bor., 1851, 16,986; do. of the town, 8,302. The town, a good deal enlarged of late, has a handsome town-house, a prison, academy, publ. library, & a signal tower, communicating with the Bell-rock lighthouse, 12 m. distant. Harbor protected by a pier, admits in general only vessels of 100 tons, but the construction of a new harb. was begun in 1841. Arbroath has manufs. of Osnaburghs, brown linens, canvas, &c., with spinning mills & bleaching works. Mkt., Sat.; fairs, Jan. 31, third Wed. in June, & July 18. It unites with Inverberbie, Forfar, &c., in sending 1 member to H. of C. The celeb. "Abbey of Aberbrothock," founded about 1178, is now a picturesque ruin.

ARBUCKLE, p-o., Mason co., Va., 354 W. by N. Richmond, 367 W.

ARBUS, a vill. isl. of Sardinia, prov. Iglesias, 30 m. N.W. Cagliari. Pop. with comm. 2,860 employed in adjacent lead mine, & manufacs. of cloth.

ARBUTHNOT, a pa. of Scotl., co. Kincardine, on the Bervie, 8 m. S.W. Stonehaven. Estim. area, 9,890 ac., two-thirds cultivated. Pop. 1,002.

ARC, a riv. of the Sard. States, rises in Mt. Iseran, & joins the Isere near Aiguebelle, after a N.W. course of 40 m. It passes the towns Lonslebourg, St. Jean de Maurienne, & Aiguebelle.—II. a riv. of France, dep. Bouches-du-Rhône, enters the Etang de Berre, after a W. course of about 30 m.—III. vills. of France, deps. Doubs, Haute Saône, & Côte-d'-or.

ARCACHON (BASSIN D'), a bay of France formed by the ocean, on the coast of the dep. Gironde. It is much frequented by foreigners, who there load cargoes of resin & pitch. The riv. Legre falls into this bay. On its S. side is the Port de la Teste, which communicates by railroad with Bordeaux.

ARCADIA, p. o., Bienville pa., La.

ARCADIA, an anc. prov. of Greece, in the centre of the Morea. Pop. 1851, 119,540. The country is mountainous, & affords excellent pasturage.

ARCANUM, p. v., Darke co., O., on the Greenville & Miami r. r.

ARCE, a town of Naples, prov. T. di Lavoro, cap. cant., 10¼ m. S.S.W. Sora. Pop. 4,356.

ARC-EN-BARROIS, an anc. town of France, dep. H. Marne, cap. cant., 13 m. S.W. Chaumont on the Anjou. Pop. 1,536, who manuf. woollens.

ARCENE, a vill. of Lombardy, prov. Bergamo, in a fertile district. Pop. 1,250.

ARCHAIG (LOCH,) a beautiful lake of Scotland, co. Inverness, dist. Lochaber, 1 m. W. Loch Lochy. Length about 17 m.; breadth from 1 to 1½ m. It is highly picturesque, though little visited by tourists.

ARCHANGEL, a gov. in the N.E. of European Russia, betw. lat. 61° & 71° N., & lon. 29° & 68° E.; comprising most part of Russ. Lapland, & all the country W. of the Ural mntns., & N. of the govs. Vologda & Olonetz, with the isls. Waigatz, Dolgoi, & Novaia-Zémlia; & having W. Olonetz, Uleaborg, & Lapland, & N. the White Sea & Arctic Ocean. Estim. Area, 322,500 sq. m., & pop. (1846) 253,000. It nearly surrounds the White Sea, & is watered by the rivs. Petchora, Mezen, Dwina, Onega, Pinega, Outcha, &c. In the N. the rivs. are ice-bound from Oct. to May. Surface mntnous. in the N., flat & marshy in the S., & abounding in excellent pasturage. Very little corn is raised, but a good deal of hemp & flax, which, with timber, cordage, matting, leather, tallow, pitch, turpentine, & potash, form the principal exports. Forests very extensive; & the inhabs. are mostly occupied in hunting & fishing. Near Kholmagory excellent cattle are reared; & around Archangel they manuf. coarse linens, & engage in ship-building. The pop. originally Finnish, is now mostly Russian; the Samoyedes in the N.E. number only from 6,000 to 7,000 persons. Chief towns, Archangel the cap., Chenkoursk, Onega, Mezen, Cola, Pinega, & Kholmogory, each of which gives name to a district.

ARCHANGEL, or ARKHANGEL, an archiepiscopal & commercial city of Russia, cap. gov. of same name, on rt. b. of the Dwina, near its mouth, in the White Sea, & in lat. 64° 32′ 8″ N.; lon. 40° 33′ E. Pop. 25,000, or according to Balbi (1844) only 10,500. It is built of wood; the great market, built of stone, & the offices of the military marine, are its princip. constructions. It has an ecclesiastical seminary, with 9 professors, a gymnasium, a school of navig., & a magnetic observatory. Archangel is the seat of a dep. of the Russian military marine, & has an exten. company established for commerce & herring fishing. It was the only place of marit. commerce in the empire previous to the founding of St. Petersburg, after which it began to decline; yet it has always retained the trade of Siberia, & a great part of Eur. Russia, & its merchants extend their negotiations to the frontiers of China. Owing to the rigor of the climate, its port is open only from July to Sept. Chief imports, colonial goods, salt, woollens, & hardwares.

ARCHANGEL, (NEW), Russ. America. [SITKA.]

ARCHANGELSK, (MALO,) a town of Russia in Europe, gov. & 85 m. S.E. Orel. Pop. 1,500.—II. gov. Olonetz, & 55 m. N.E. Kargopol.

ARCHENA, a town of Spain, prov. & 14 m. N.W. Murcia, with extensive warm baths (temp. 126° Fahr.), & Roman antiquities.

ARCHER, p-t., Harrison co., O., 122 E. by N. Columbus, 202 W. Drained by Stillwater r., & tributaries. Pop. 1840, 1,012; 1850, 875.

ARCHER'S SETTLEMENT, v., Monroe co., O., has a Roman Catholic church & 75 inhabitants.

ARCHIBALD, p-v., Luzerne co., Pa., 25 m. N.E. from Wilkesbarre, on r. r. connected with the Delaware & Hudson canal, & on the Lackawanna river. It is in the midst of a rich coal mining district, & is rapidly growing in importance. Pop. 1,200.

ARCHIDONA, a town of Spain, Andalucia, prov. & 33 m. N. Malaga. Pop. 7,611.—II. a town of S. America. Ecuador, 90 m. E.S.E. Quito.

ARCHIPELAGO, a term formerly applied exclusively to the isls. of the Egean sea, but now to any collection of contiguous isls. The Grecian archip. consists of all the isls. between continental Greece & Asia Minor, belonging partly to the kgdm. of Greece, & partly to Turkey, the principal being Naxos, Paros, Milo, Tinos, Lemnos, Thasos, Mytilene, Scio, Cos, & Rhodes. For the other archips., see their several prefixes, as the Asiatic or Eastern Archip., the Mergui Archip., &c.

ARCIS-SUR-AUBE, a town of France, dep. Aube, cap. arrond. on the Aube, 16 m. N. by E. Troyes. Pop. 2,665. It is pretty well built, has manufs. of cotton stockings & yarn, & is an entrepôt for iron, & for the wooden wares made in the Vosges. On 20th March, 1814, Napoleon defeated a division of the Allied army near this place.

ARCO, a town of Austria, Tyrol, circ. & 8 m. W. Roveredo, on the Sorca, with 2,100 inhabs., an old castle, & manufs. of silk.

ARCOLA, p-o., Loudon co., Va., 141 N. Richmond, 36 W.

ARCOLA, p. o., Warren co., N. C.

ARCOLA, p-v., Madison t., Lake co., O. It has 2 blast furnaces, which yield 1,400 tons of fine iron castings annually, a steam grist m., & 150 inhabs.

ARCOLA, an anc. town of Piedmont, prov. Levante, celeb. for its wines. Pop. 2,350.

ARCOLE, a vill. of Northern Italy, deleg. & 15 m. E.S.E. Verona, on the Alpone, an affl. of the Adige. Pop. 1,600. Arcole is celebrated for its victory gained by Napoleon over the Austrians, 17th Nov. 1796.

ARCOS DE LA FRONTERA, a town of Spain, Andalucia, cap. jud. dist. same name, prov. & 29 m. N.E. Cadiz, on an elevated rock near the rt. b. of the Guadelete. Pop. 11,272. It was formerly strongly fortified, but now only part of its walls remain. Chief manufs. tanned leather, which is celeb. in the country, & the first established in Andalucia; thread, & ropes. There are several vills. in Spain & Portugal named ARCOS.

ARCOT, (NORTH & SOUTH,) two contig. marit dists. of British India, presid. Madras, comprising the whole country from Coleroon river on the S. to the frontier of the Nellore dist., on the N. & E. of Cuddapah, Mysore, & Salem, with the exception of the Chingleput district, lying round Madras. United area, 12,700 sq. m. Pop. 1,957,000. Surface low near the sea, inland hilly, with extens. jungles. Chief rivers the Coleroon & Palaur; & on the N.E. coast is the Pulicat lake. A good deal of rice & other grains is raised, & many piece goods were formerly made here, but these are now superseded by European fabrics. Chief city & towns, Arcot, Vellore, & Cuddalore.—Arcot, a city, cap. dist. N. Arcot, & formerly the cap. of the Carnatic prov., on the Palaur, 64 m. W. by S. Madras. It is enclosed by walls; has some fine mosques, tombs, & a ruined palace of its former nabobs. The ramparts of a former fort still remain, & protect the city from the inundations of the river.

ARCS (LES.) Castrum de Arcubus, a comm. & vill. of France, dep. Var, 5 m. S. Draguignan, near the Argens. Pop. 1,910.

ARCTIAS, a small isl. of the Black Sea, off the coast of Asia Minor, 2 m. W.N.W. Kerahsun.

ARCTIC HIGHLANDS, a region of N. America, between Hudson bay & the mouth of the Mackenzie river. The E. portion rises steep from the shore, the interior is unknown, & the W. portion is called the "Barren Grounds." The whole region is nearly destitute of wood, but its surface is covered by low hills.

ARCTIC OCEAN, that portion of the N. Sea which extends from the arctic circle (lat. 66° 30′ N.) to the N. pole. It receives the waters of the northern slopes of the great continents, & is the recipient of the drainage of an area of 3,751,270 sq. ms. It enters deeply, in the form of gulfs, bays, &c., into the N. parts of the continents of both Hemispheres. The principal of these indentations are the White Sea, in Europe; Sea of Kara, Gulfs of Obe & Yenisee, in Siberia, & Baffin Bay in N. America. It is united to the Pacific by Behring Strait, & to the Atlantic by Davis' Strait, & a wide sea extending from Greenland on the W. to Norway & Lapland on the E. This portion of the Arctic Ocean is occupied centrally by Greenland, & on the E. is the extensive group of Spitzbergen, the small island of San Mayen, & Iceland. West of Greenland, & divided from it by Davis' Strait & Baffin Bay, are a considerable number of islands of great size, which have been but imperfectly explored. The region north of lat. 70° is the most dreary on the face of the globe.

The shores are covered with eternal snows, & the surface of the sea, when its icy covering is rent asunder, presents a series of huge floating masses in perpetual motion, & whose tremendous collisions are attended with the most appalling sounds. Dense fogs, violent storms, & endless nights, add to the horrors of the scene. In the region of Spitzbergen, the sun is not seen for several months in the year, & the thermometer rarely rises above 45° Fahr.; while there is but one month in the year (July), in which snow does not fall. The only, or at least the greatest degree of light, the inhabitants enjoy during their long winters, or from the latter end of September to the beginning of May, is that which proceeds from the borrowed lustre of the moon, the stars, the aurora, or the snow blink. This Ocean freezes even in summer, & during the eight winter months a continuous body of ice extends over its entire surface, filling the area of the circle of betw. 3,000 & 4,000 miles in diameter. The icebergs, of which vast numbers are continually in motion wherever an opening appears, vary from a few yards to miles in circumference, & rise to hundreds of feet in height. The ice in these regions is very transparent, compact, & remarkable for the variety & beauty of its tints. The water is extremely pure, shells being distinctly visible at a depth of 80 fathoms. The pressure of the water at a depth of 1¼ m. has been found to be 2,809 lbs. on a square inch of surface.

The history of adventure in the Arctic Seas presents a striking disproportion between effort & achievement. All that human daring can do, has been done to open up the mysteries of these dreary regions. The first attempt to explore the polar seas, was made in 1553, by Willoughby & Chancellor, who were sent out with instructions to ascertain if there was a N. E. passage, or if they could reach China by passing to the N. of Europe & Asia. Willoughby reached Nova Zembla, but he & all his crew were frozen to death. Chancellor entered the White Sea, & thus opened a communication with Russia. Capt. Cook reached Icy Cape from the Pacific, in 1778. In 1607 Capt. Hudson was sent out to attempt to discover the N.W. passage, & reached the lat. of 81°, but was under the necessity of putting back, on account of the ice. In 1773 this experiment was again tried by an expedition under the command of Capt. Phipps, who advanced about as far as Capt. Hudson had previously done; & a similar attempt was made in 1818, which proved equally unfortunate, under Capt. Buchan. In 1818 Capt. Ross attempted a N.W. passage, & passed through Lancaster Sound. In 1819 Capt. Parry reached lon. 110° W., & in 1821-23 examined the coast to the N. of Hudson Bay; in 1824 he reached Prince Regent Inlet. In 1820 Capt. Franklin was sent overland to explore the N. coast of America, to the W. of Mackenzie's river; & at the same time Capt. Beechey was despatched to meet him in Behring Strait. The two expeditions approached each other to within a distance of 146 m., but returned without meeting. In 1827 Capt. Parry was sent out to penetrate as far as possible in the direction of the Pole in boats & sledges, over the ice, & he reached about 82° 40′, the highest latitude yet attained. In 1829-33 Capt. Ross sailed up Prince Regent Inlet, ascertained that there is no communication between the Arctic Ocean & the Atlantic S. of Barrow Strait. The expedition sent out in search of the long desired route from the Atlantic to the Pacific, through the Polar Seas, commanded by Sir John Franklin, sailed in 1845, with two ships, the Erebus & Terror, & has not since been heard of. Several expeditions have been despatched in search of the missing navigator & his companions, but hitherto without success. One of these expeditions, commanded by Capt. Kellet, attained, on August 15, 1849, the lat. of 71° 12′ N., lon. 170° 10′ W.; & on the 16th discovered an almost inaccessable island of granite, rising 1,400 ft. above the sea, beyond which a range of high land was seen; but constant snow storms compelled him to quit the neighborhood without doing more, to prevent his being hemmed in by the pack ice.

The long absence of the Expedition under the command of Capt. Franklin, & the unsuccessful efforts made from Britain to ascertain the fate of the missing navigators, induced Lady Franklin to appeal to America for aid in seeking for her husband & his companions. Her appeal was responded to by Henry Grinnell. He purchased vessels, which, with the countenance & aid of the United States Government, were sent to assist in the search. This munificent act of Mr. Grinnell is without a precedent. It was an undertaking by a private citizen of one country to seek out & restore to their homes, if possible, the officers & crews of the absent ships of another. The American Searching Vessels were placed under the command of Lieutenant De Haven, of the United States Navy. The Rescue, the foremost vessel of the American Expedition, entered Wellington Channel in company with the Assistance, the foremost vessel of all the British Expeditions, on the 24th of August, 1850; & when, at the close of the season, it became apparent that no farther progress could be made, the American vessels, without the aid of steam, were at the farthest point that was made by any vessel of the three British Expeditions then engaged in the search, all of which had been assisted by steam on their outward voyage, when in, & while crossing Baffin Bay. The Expeditions of Ross, Austin, & Penny, made harbors. The Americans were afloat the whole of a long arctic winter, at the mercy of the winds, the currents, & the ice. On the 18th of September De Haven was north of Cape Bowden, the most northern point seen by Parry in 1819, & farther north within Lancaster sound than had been attained by any vessel of all the Exploring & Searching Expeditions. His discoveries began at Cape Bowden, on the 17th of September; by the end of the month he was at 75° 25′ N. Here he saw hitherto unknown land to the East, & the West, & far to the North. Of this new discovered land he gave the name of GRINNELL LAND; & to a height of land seen, Mount Franklin; & named the bodies of water, Maury channel, &c. The following season this country was explored by passing over the ice much farther west, by Capt. Penny & others of the British Navy. The name of GRINNELL LAND has been ungenerously omitted from the charts of this region, published by the British Admiralty, & the name of Albert Land supplies its place. The names

Mt. Franklin, De Haven bay, &c., have been omitted, & others supplied. How magnanimous!!! The great Geographical Problem that for ages has baffled the world, has been solved the past year (1853). Although no ship has yet actually made the North West passage, yet navigators coming from the West & navigators coming from the East, have met together & shaken hands across the ice. To Commander McClure of the British Navy belongs this honor.

Of the expedition & its objects, from the U. States, now in the Arctic Seas, Dr. Kane, the commander, has thus spoken:

"The question of access to the Arctic Pole, the penetration to this open sea, is now brought again before us, not as in the days of Hudson, & Scoresby, & Parry, a curious problem for scientific inquiry, but as an object claiming philanthropic effort, & appealing thus to the sympathies of the whole civilized world,—the rescue of Sir John Franklin & his followers. The recent discoveries by the united squadrons of De Haven & Penny, of Franklin's first winter quarters at the mouth of Wellington Channel, aided by the complete proofs since obtained that he did not proceed to the east or west, render it beyond conjecture certain that he passed up Wellington Channel to the North. Here we have lost him; &, save the lonely records upon the tombstones of his dead, for years he has been lost to the world. To assign his exact position is impossible: we only know that he has travelled up this land-locked channel, seeking the objects of his enterprise to the North & West."

"My plan of search is based upon the probable extension of the land masses of Greenland to the far north—a view yet to be verified by travel, but sustained by the analogies of physical geography."

"The point I would endeavor to make would be the highest attainable seats of Baffin Bay, from the sound known as Smith Sound, & advocated by Baron Wrangell as the most eligible site for reaching the North Pole. As a point of departure, it is 220 miles to the north of Beechy Island, the starting point of Sir Edward Belcher, & 70 miles north of the utmost limits seen or recorded in Wellington Channel. The party to consist of some thirty men, with a couple of launches, sledges, dogs, & gutta percha boats. The provision to be pemmican, a preparation of dried meat, packed in cases impregnable to the appetite of the polar bear. The brig furnished by Mr. Grinnell, is admirably strengthened & fully equipped to meet the peculiar trials of the service. After reaching the settlement of Uppernavik, we take in a supply of Esquimaux dogs, & a few picked men to take charge of the sledges.

"We then enter the ice of Melville Bay, & if successful in penetrating it, hasten to Smith Sound, forcing our vessel to the utmost navigable point, & there securing her for the winter. The operations of search, however, are not to be suspended. Active exercise is the best safe-guard against the scurvy; & although the darkness of winter will not be in our favor, I am convinced that with the exception, perhaps, of the solstitial period of maximum obscurity, we can push forward our provision depôts, by sledge & launch, & thus prepare for the final efforts of our search. The sledges which constitute so important a feature of our Expedition, & upon which not only our success but our safety will depend, are to be constructed with extreme care. Each sledge will carry the blanket, bags, & furs, of six men, together with a measured allowance of pemmican; a light tent of India-rubber cloth will be added; but for our nightly halt the main dependence will be the snow house of the Esquimaux. It is almost incredible, in the face of what obstacles, to what extent a well-organized sledge party can advance. The relative importance of every ounce of weight can be calculated, & the system of advanced depôts of provisions organized admirably. Alcohol or tallow is the only fuel; & the entire cooking apparatus, which is more for thawing the snow for tea-water than for heating food, can be carried in a little bag. It is my intention to cover each sledge with a gutta percha boat. Thus equipped, we follow the tract of the coast, seeking the open water. Once there, if such a reward awaits us, we launch our little boats, & bidding God speed us, embark upon its waters." The echo of every American heart is, "God speed him." See GRINNELL LAND.

ARCUEIL, a vill. of France, dep. Seine, 3 m. S. Paris, on the r. r. from Paris to Sceaux. Pop. 2,174. A fine aqueduct, constructed by Mary de Medicis, conveys water from Rungis to Paris. There is also the remns. of a Rom. aq.

ARCY-SUR-CURE, a vill. of France, dep. Yonne, 14 m. S.E. Auxerre, with 1,495 inhabs., & near some stalactitic caverns of great beauty.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC, or the United States of the Republic of La Plata, S. America. Is between lat. 22° 20′, & 40° 50′ S. lon., 50° 20′ & 71° 30′ W. The Andes divide it on the W. from Chili & the desert of Atacama. On the N. is Bolivia, E. Paraguay, Brazil, & Uraguay, from which States it is separated by the Paraguay, Parana, & Uraguay rivers, S.E. the Atlantic Ocean & S. Patagonia, on which side the Rio Negro forms the frontier. The confederation consists of 13 States & an extensive unappropriated territory called Grand Chaco. The names, sq. ms., population, & capitals of each, are as follows:

States.	Area in sq. miles.	Population.	Capitals.
Buenos Ayres	1,940	250,000	Buenos Ayres.
Corrientes	6,000	49,500	Corrientes.
Entre Rios		39,600	Parana.
Santa Fe	1,930	24,200	Santa Fe.
Cordoba	2,160	95,700	Cordoba.
San Luis de la Punta	1,680	39,800	San Luis de la Punta.
Mendoza	2,200	51,000	Mendoz.

Tucuman	1,980	56,100	Tucuman.
Salta	2,600	69,300	Salta.
Grand Chaco (Indian Territory)
Total	30,210	824,400

Of this population about 550,000 were Creoles, Spaniards, &c., aborigines 175,000, & 104,400 negroes.

Except a portion of the Pampas, which is watered by the Rio Negro, Colorado, & Desaguadero rivers, nearly all the country belongs to the basin of the Plata river, the great estuary of which is between the State of Buenos Ayres & Uraguay. The States Mendoza, La Rioja, Catamarca, & Salta, along their W. & N. frontiers, are mountainous, & some elevated ranges are scattered over Cordova & some parts of the country E. of the Parana; but the rest of this region consists chiefly of two immense plains,—the N. watered by the Salado, Vermejo, Pilcomayo, &c., forming part of the Grand Chaco, which extends into the E. half of Bolivia, & the S. or Pampas, a plain covered alternately with luxuriant pasturage, vast crops of gigantic thistles, & interspersed with a multitude of salt lakes, some of a large size. By far the most important product is cattle. Immense numbers of oxen roam at large over the plains, or are reared on breeding estates of vast extent. Horses also are in immense herds, & mules are bred for sale to Peruvian & other traders. The breeds of sheep & hogs are of inferior quality. The guanaco, llama, & Vicúna, abound in the vicinity of the Andes; & the native animals comprises the puma, jaguar, & armadillo; the biscacha, the burrowings of which render excursions in the Pampas sometimes dangerous; & the small quadrupeds which furnish the nutria & chinchilla skins. Cotton, tobacco, rice, cocoa, sugar cane, & indigo, are raised: maize, wheat, & other grains, are principal articles of culture; other products are cochineal, madder, cinchona bark, Paraguay tea, &c. The exports consist mostly of hides, skins, horns, bones, horse hair, wool, tallow, ostrich feathers, salted meats, crude saltpetre, cocoa, &c., to the value of $10,000,000 annually. In La Rioja, from 8,000 to 10,000 small barrels of strong wine are made annually & sent into Cordova & the neighboring States, & a good deal of full-bodied wine & brandy is sent to Buenos Ayres, from Mendoza. All agricultural processes, however, are in the most backward condition. Salt effloresces in large quantities on the surface of the plains, & there are some mines of rock salt. Coal is reported to be plentiful in the S.W., & sulphur, alum, mineral pitch, &c., in the vicinity of the Andes, but few if any mines are wrought. The Indians of the Chaco manufacture yarns, ropes, fishing nets, & other articles, from the fibres of the aloe, with saddle cloths, blankets, & other fabrics, which they dye with great skill, & sell to their more civilized neighbors; & in Cordova similar goods, morocco leather & tanned wares, are manufactured; but in general manufactured goods are imported from abroad, in return for raw produce. The foreign trade has heretofore been monopolized by Buenos Ayres. The financial returns of 1850 exhibit a prosperous condition. The receipts amounting to $52,266,510 currency, expenditures $50,046,351, leaving a balance in the treasury at the end of the year of $10,050,033, & the amount deposited in the bank $17,553,666, making the total available resources $36,615,699. The national debt in 1850 was $18,283,244, of which sum $13,535,244 constituted the home, & $5,250,000 the foreign debt. The Government is republican, & the legislative power invested in a junta of 44 deputies, one half annually renewed by popular election, & in a senate of 2 deputies from each department. From 1835 a nearly absolute dictatorship existed in the person of Rosas, until 1852, when he was banished the country, & a provisional government established by the assemblage of the governors of the different states or provinces, & the republican form of government restored, & a Director or Captain General elected on the 30th Oct., 1852, & the river La Plata declared free to the commercial traffic & navigation of all nations. This country was discovered in 1517, & settled in 1553 by the Spaniards, under whom it was erected into a vice royalty. The English made an unsuccessful attempt on it in 1807. Its independence of Spain dates from 1816.

Federal representative population, 191,027.

The capital is Little Rock, situated on the rt. bank of Arkansas r., 300 miles from its entrance into the Mississippi. The other principal towns are Helena, Columbia, Van Buren, Fort Smith, Washington, Batesville, Fayetteville, El Dorado, &c.

The eastern part of the State, for the distance of 100 m. from the Mississippi, is low, & much of it is subject to be overflowed at certain seasons, but it is has been in a great measure obviated by an extensive embankment or levee along the Mississippi, Arkansas, & White rivers. The central part of the State is uneven & broken, & in the W. it is hilly & mountainous. There are some extensive prairies, & some heavily timbered lands. On the margin of the rivers the soil is exceedingly fertile.

The Ozark mountains, rising sometimes to the height of from 1,000 to 2,000 feet, cross the N.W. part. A range of hills, called the Black Mountains, runs between the Arkansas & White rivers, extending W. from near White river to the W. border of the State. A little S.W. of the centre of the State are boiling springs, the temperature of which at times rises nearly to the boiling point, though subject to much variation. Near these springs are ridges of hills which rise into elevated peaks known as the Potean & Washita mountains, whose highest elevations are west of the State in the Indian territory. Wild animals, as the deer, elk, bear & wolf; & wild fowls, as the wild goose, turkey, & quail, are found in abundance. Its mineral productions are extensive, consisting of iron ore, lead, zinc, & copper, gypsum, coal, & salt. The country is well adapted to the raising of cattle.

There were in this State in 1850, 781,531 acres of land improved, & 1,816,684 of unimproved land in farms; cash value of farms, $15,265,245; value of implements & machinery, $1,601,296. Live Stock—horses, 60,197; asses & mules, 11,559; milch cows, 93,151; working oxen, 34,239; other cattle, 165,320; sheep, 91,256; swine 836,727; value of live stock, $6,647,969. Agricultural Products, &c.—wheat, 199,639 bush. produced; rye, 8,047; Indian corn, 8,895,939; oats, 656,183; barley, 177; buckwheat, 175; peas & beans, 285,738; potatoes, 193,832; sweet potatoes, 788,149; rice, 62,179 pounds; value of products of the orchard, $40,141; produce of market gardens, $17,150; pounds of butter made, 1,854,239; of cheese, 30,088; maple sugar, 9,330 pounds; molasses, 18 gallons; bees wax & honey, 192,338 pounds; wool, 182,595 pounds produced; cotton, 65,344; flax, 12,291; hemp, 15 tons; silk cocoons, 38 pounds; hops, 157; tobacco, 218,936 hay (tons of), 3,976; clover seed, 90 bushels; other grass seeds, 436; flax seed, 321; & there were made 35 gallons of wine; value of home-made manufactures, $638,217; of slaughtered animals, $1,162,913.

In the eastern part, particularly on the borders of the rivers, the climate is generally moist & unhealthy, but in the middle & western parts it is salubrious. Its rivers afford great facilities for commerce. The Mississippi flows along its E. border for the distance of nearly 400 miles. The Arkansas river, which gives name to the State, flows through it in a south-eastwardly direction; is a broad & deep stream, & is navigable for steamboats 300 m. to Little Rock, & in the spring floods 350 m. farther to Port Gibson, beyond the W. border of the State. White river rises in Ozark mountains, flows through a fertile & healthy country, abounding with springs & streams of pure water, & affords many mill seats. It flows into the Arkansas r., & is uncommonly circuitous in its course. The St. Francis river rises in Missouri, & flows S. nearly parallel to the Mississippi, which it at last enters. It is boatable for 300 miles. The Washita waters is southern, & the Red r., a majestic stream, its S.W. part.

Manufactures.—There were in the State in 1850, 3 cotton factories, with a capital invested of $16,500, employing 13 males & 18 females, producing sheetings & 81,250 pounds of yarn, valued at $14,637; 28 flouring & grist mills, 57 saw mills, 51 tanneries, 9 newspapers, including periodicals, published. Capital invested in manufactures, $324,055.

Religion.—There were in this state in 1850, 114 Baptist churches, 2 Episcopal, 1 Free, 168 Methodist, 52 Presbyterian, 7 Roman Catholic, 5 Union, & 13 others, the whole having 362 churches. Total value of church property, $89,315.

Education, &c.—There were in 1850, 3 colleges, 159 students; 90 academies, 2,407 pupils; 353 schools, 8,493 scholars; 3 libraries; 1 public & 2 Sunday schools. Av. number of vols., 420.

Form of Government.—The constitution of the State was formed in 1836. The governor is chosen by the people for four years, but cannot hold the office more than eight years in twelve. The members of the Senate are chosen by the people for four years, one half biennially, & the representatives for two years. The elections are viva voce. The Senate consists of 25 members, & the House of Representatives of 75 members. The judges of the Supreme Court are chosen by the Legislature for eight years. The Legislature meet once in two years at Little Rock. Every white male citizen of the United States, & who has resided in the State for six months, possesses the right of suffrage. No lotteries can be established, or lottery tickets sold. It cannot emancipate slaves without the consent of the owners. Slaves have the right of trial by jury, & suffer the same degree of punishment for a crime as white persons, & no other. Courts of justice are obliged to assign counsel to the slaves for their defence. Arkansas was a part of the Louisiana purchase. It was made a separate territory in 1819, & was admitted into the Union in 1836.

ARKANSAS, county, Ark, lies on both sides of Arkansas r., near its mouth. Area, 1,200 sq. miles. White r. runs on its N.E. boundary. It is watered on the N. parts by Bayou Agnew, which enters White r., & Big Meter r., which enters the Arkansas. The surface is level, soil very fertile. Capital, Arkansas Post. There were in 1850, live stock valued at $107,541; Ind. corn, 116,535 bush. produced; sweet potatoes, 10,712; cotton, 3,769 bales; tobacco, 750 pounds;—5 grist m., 1 saw m., 9 churches, 7 sch., 95 scholars. ARMENIA (the Minni of the Scriptures), a country of W. Asia, extending from the Caucasus on the N. to the mountains of Kurdistan on the S., & from the Euphrates (which separates it from Asia Minor) on the W., to near the Caspian on the E., being thus between lat. 37° & 42° N., & lon. 39° & 50° E. It is subdivided among the Turkish pashalics of Erzeroum, Kars, & Van, & parts of the Persian prov. Azerbijan, & the Russian government of Transcaucasia. Area may be roughly estimated at 90,000 sq. m., & its pop. from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000, including a great variety of tribes & races. The greater part of the surface constitutes an elevated table land. Mt. Ararat, near the centre, rises to an elevation of 17,260 feet. It is watered by the rivers Kur, Aras, Jorah, ancient Akampsis, & the two heads of the Euphrates, & contains the sources of the Tigris, & the three large lakes of Van, Urumiyah, & Sevan. The climate in the higher regions is very cold, while the valleys in summer are scorched with heat. Soil very various. It has many fertile corn-lands & pastures, & its valleys produce excellent cotton, rice, tobacco, grapes, & other fruits. Copper, lead, alum, & some silver mines are wrought. Manufs. unimportant. The native Armenians, estim. at 1-7th of the whole pop., are distinguished for enterprize in commercial & banking transactions. The Armenian Christians mostly belong to an ecclesiastical establishment of their own, similar in many respects to the Greek Church; but many have adhered to the Roman Catholic Church ever since the 15th century. Until the present century, Armenia was shared betw. Turkey & Persia. Russia acquired Georgia, Kar'abagh, Erivan, & Nakhchevan, from Persia, between 1800 & 1828, & parts of the pash. Akhalzikh between 1829 & 1833. The chief towns are the caps. of the several pashs & provs., & mostly of same names.—Armenia-Minor is the ancient name of the country forming the mod. Turkish pashs. of Kaisariyeh, Sivas, & Marash, included in Asia Minor, but which were respectively termed First, Second, & Third Armenia—Fourth Armenia having been the mod. pash. ASHANTEE, a country of Africa, & the most powerful native state of Upper Guinea, between lat. 6° & 8° N., lon. 0° & 3° W. The sovereignty of its chief over the petty states on the coast, ceased in 1831, & its S. limit is now 60 m. from the Gulf of Guinea. Pop. probably 1,000,000. (?) It is mntnous., well-watered, & healthy in the more elev. districts. Chief rivers Volta & Assinie. Products comprise maize, millet, dhourra, rice, yams, tobacco, the sugar-cane, cocoa, the pine-apple, & other fine fruits, with dye-woods, gums, & timber; the chief exports are gold dust & palm-oil. The inhabitants are courageous, intelligent, & excel in several kinds of manufs.; but they appear to have been long subjected to a most bloody despotism, whole multitudes having been customarily slaughtered at festivals & at the deaths of royal personages. From the late Parliamentary Reports on W. Africa, however, it appears that, owing to British influence, human sacrifices have in a great measure declined. In 1824, the Ashantees attacked the English settlement on the coast, & defeated a force of 1,000 men under Sir C. Macarthy; but in 1826, they sustained a total route from the British troops, since which time the Ashantee power has progressively decreased. Chief town & seat of trade Coomassie.

ASIA, the largest of the great divisions of the globe, comprehends all the countries to the E. of Europe & Northern Africa, & extends with its isls., betw. lat. 10° S., & 78° N., & lon. 26° E. to 190° E. (170° W.) A great central mass of continent forms about four-fifths of the whole area, & from this several extens. peninsulas & headlands project on the E., S., & W., with many clusters of contiguous isls. Asia is closely connected with the other continents, being separated by no great sea distance from America on the N.E., & Australia on the S.E., connected with Africa by the isthmus of Suez on the S.W., & conterminous with Europe on the W. by an extens. boundary line, formed by the Uralian & Caucasian mntns. Its whole area is supposed to amount to upwards of 16 millions of sq. m., & its pop. to 626 millions. Central Asia is composed of two great elev. table lands, a higher & a lower, each descending by gradual slopes & terraces to the level lowlands, while these table lands themselves are traversed by numerous mountain chains & elev. ranges of country. The eastern system of these table lands comprehends the elev. district of Tibet, & the great desert of Gobi, from 4,000 to 10,000 ft. above the sea level, the western, the plateau of Iran (Persia), with a general elevation of 4,000 ft. Both these districts combined may occupy about two-fifths of the whole of Asia, the remainder is occupied partly by the terraces, by the intervention of which the elev. table lands gradually sink towards the lowland, & partly by the lowlands themselves. The length of the elev. regions, from the Black Sea & Persian Gulf on the W. to the Corean Coast on the E., is upwards of 5,500 m. The greatest breadth, from 1,800 to 2,000 m. on the N. E. of China, while in the W., in Beloochistan & Bucharia, it contracts to 700 m. The mntns. of Taurus & Caucasus form the boundary of the plateau on the N.W.; Mt. Elbruz near the Caspian Sea, the Altai range in Siberia, & the Alpine region of Da-uria, on the N.E. The Himmalaya mntns. form the S. boundary, & the Persian mntns. & Mt. Taurus the W. The most elev. portion of the Eastern Plateau is in Tibet, where it rises to the height of 10,000 to 14,000 ft. It then sinks gradually to the N. & N.W., forming a series of terraces, which terminate in the low steppes around L. Aral. It is through these sloping terraces, by which the eastern Plateau is everywhere intersected, that the great riv. systems descend to the lowlands bordering on the ocean. On the mntn. ranges N. of the table land, four great rivs. take their rise—the Irtish, the Yenesei, the Lenar, & the Amur, draining a surface of country more extensive than that of Europe. Two great rivs. take their rise in the E. range, the Hoang-Ho & the Yangtse-Kiang, which, flowing through China, discharge their waters into the Pacific Ocean. The principal rivs. of S. Asia, are the Cambodia, Irawaddy, & Menam; the Brahmaputra, Ganges, & Indus, taking their rise in the Himalaya mntns., & traversing by diverging routes the country known as India within the Ganges. The Western Plateau is much smaller in extent than the eastern, but being more contiguous to Europe, assimilates more in its character to that continent. The high table land of Iran extends from the Upper Indus through W. Asia to the shores of the Grecian Archipelago. Persia forms its centre; to the W. are the Turkish domins., & E. Afghanistan. The centre is intersected by several extensive mntn. ridges, through which are some important passes from the Highlands of Persia to the coast. Westward of Persia, the table land becomes more mntnous, in the countries of Kurdistan, Azerbijan, & Armenia; here the rivs. Euphrates & Tigris have their source, which flowing through Mesopotamia & anc. Babylonia, enter the Persian Gulf by one channel. The penin. of Arabia forms a continuation of the Highlands of W. Asia. The Lowlands of Asia may be divided into, 1, Chinese Lowlands on the E., commencing at Pekin, & extending nearly to the tropic, enjoying a temperate climate & fertile soil; 2, the Indo-Chinese, comprehending Cambodia & Siam, a well-watered & good rice country; 3, Hindostan, bounded by the Ganges & Indus, forming a great triangle; 4, Syria & Arabia, the southern part dry & desert, the northern watered by the Euphrates & Tigris; 5, the Northern Siberian, in extent more than half all the others, stretching along the Polar Sea from the Ural Mnts. to the Pacific Ocean, a cold & generally sterile region; 6, Bucharia, on the Caspian Sea & L. Aral, with a gravelly soil, ill-watered, covered with grass, without trees, & with only occasional patches of fertile land. The Mineral products of Asia are numerous, & have been known from remote antiquity. Precious stones are abundant. Amethysts, topazes, & rock-crystals are found in the Altai, Himalaya, & Ural mntns.; carnelians & agates in W. India; beryl & lapis lazuli near L. Baikal; sapphires & rubies, Ceylon isl.; diamonds in Deccan, Borneo, & Ural mntns. Volcanic products are found near Mt. Taurus, in Armenia, W. Anatolia, & in Japan & Sunda isl.; steatite, asbestos, & kaolin or fine porcelain clay, in China & Japan; talc in Siberia; coals in Hindostan & China; rock salt in the Ural mntns., N. China, & Turkey; gold or gold-dust in various localities. In 1843 the mines of Siberia produced 58,367 lbs. troy of gold, estimated value $13,750,000. Mercury in China & Japan. Copper & iron in Ural mntns., & lead in Da-Uria, China, Armenia. Fossil shells are found in great quantities at an elev. of 16,000 to 17,000 ft. in Tibet; mammalia remains in the lower Himalaya, & the alluvial soil of Siberia, is full of bones of extinct quadrupeds.

The vegetation of Asia varies with its different regions. N. of lat. 60° scarcely any vegetable products are seen except birches, mosses, & lichens. In S. Siberia, & in land as far S. as the chain of the Himalaya & Hindoo Koosh, the vegetation in a great measure resembles that of N. & Central Europe, though all the great table land of E. Asia is remarkably barren of timber. Ginseng & rhubarb are products peculiar to this region. In the cultivated plains of Bokhara & Caubul, grapes, melons, pears, figs, & other fruits common in Europe, grow to such perfection that they are exported in considerable quantities to Persia & Hindostan. N. of the Caucasus, the country is thinly covered with vegetable products, & those are of inferior quality; but immediately S. of that chain, the cedar, cypress, juniper, oak, & the fruits common to S. Europe, begin to flourish luxuriantly; & rice, cotton, indigo, sugar, tobacco, dates, are among the products of the fruitful provs. of Turkey & Persia. The region of Asia S. & E. of the Himalaya, comprising the Ind. peninsulas, with China-proper & the Asiatic Archipelago, is unrivalled for the number & richness of its vegetable products. These include the plantain, banyan, ebony, iron, rose, & sandal-wood trees; bamboos, gums, varnishes, & dye-woods in immense variety; with the betel, bread-fruit & banana, guava, mango, mangosteen, & a multitude of other fruits; sugar, opium, cotton, indigo, & numerous valuable articles of culture. The teak-tree, tea, sago, camphor, cloves, mace, & nutmegs, are peculiar to this part of the globe. Wheat is raised at an elev. of 10,000 ft. in the Himalaya mntns. The zoology of the N. of Asia partakes of the character of that of N. Europe. In the central & southern countries are found the elephant, rhinoceros, Bengal tiger, & many other formidable animals, with the camel, auroch, yaik, musk-deer, argal, Tibet goat; & it is believed that all the domestic animals of Europe (the sheep perhaps excepted) have been originally derived from Asia. There seems to be this marked distinction between the ox, horse, ass, goat, hog, & other mammal tribes which are natives of Asia, & those which are indigenous in Africa or America,—that the former alone are capable of propagation & domestication in every climate. Asia has comparatively a less variety of birds & reptiles than of quadrupeds, but the cassowary, bustard, pheasant, domestic fowl, & a variety of other gallinaceous birds, are abundant: & among reptiles, the Indian python, the cobra-de-capello or spectacle snake, with the gavial, or crocodile of the Ganges, are formidable in the highest degree.

Asia is considered the cradle of the human race, from whence the various nations & tribes have issued to people the other parts of the world. The number of foreigners, who have migrated to & settled in Asia, is small compared to those who have left it. The number of Europeans in India may be estim. at 100,000, the descendants of the Cossacks settled in Siberia, 2 millions, Europ. Greeks inhabiting Anatolia, 1¼ million. The races inhabiting Asia may be divided into, 1. The Semitic, including Syrians, Jews, Arabs, & the descendants of the anc. Chaldeans or Aramæans:—2. The Persian Kurds, Ossetes, Armenians, Georgians, Mingrelians;—3. The Turks, forming a numerous race of central Asia;—4. The Samoiedes, N. Asia;—5. The Mongols, Buriats, Kalmucks, Tungooses, & other tribes in N.E. Asia:—5. The Japanese, Chinese:—6. The Malays, inhabiting Malaysia & the isls. of the Eastern Archipelago. The political divs. of Asia include six empires, China, Russia, Britain, Persia, Turkey, Arabia. The British possessions are chiefly in India, or the peninsula within the Ganges. The Portuguese, whose settlements were formerly numerous, have preserved only Goa, Damaun, Macao, & a few others. The French possess Pondicherry, a settlement on the coast of Malabar, & two or three more. The Dutch occupy Java, Sumatra, the Moluccas, &c.

The following Table affords a general estimate, as nearly as the data will permit, of its extent & population, probably in most cases overrated:—

The followers of the religious sects of Asia are thus estimated:—Sect of Buddha or Fo, 360,000,000; Brahmins, 150,000,000; Mussulmans, 130,000,000; Christians of all denominations, 50,000,000; Shamans, 9,000,000; Sikhs, 5,000,000; in China, the sect of Lao Kiun, 2,500,000; Sect of Confucius, 1,500,000; in Japan, Sect of Sinto, 1,300,000; Jews, 800,000; Ghebirs, 500,000.

The mammalia of Asia, including the isls., comprise 422 species, of which 134 belong in common to Asia and other continents, leaving 288 exclusively Asiatic. The latter number is thus distributed:—Quadrumana, 39; Cheiroptera, 41; Carnivora, 60; Marsupiala, 3; Rodentia, 75; Edentata, 2; Pachydermata, 8; Ruminantia, 46; Cetacea, 14; total, 288. Among the carnivora alone found in Asia, the tiger, the type of the sanguinary development, is the most formidable; occurring in the south-eastern countries, his range extending westward to Persia, & northward to L. Baikal.

ASIA ISLES, a cluster of low & thickly wooded isls. in the Asiatic Archipelago, E. of Gilolo. Lat. 1° N.; lon. 131° 17′ E.

ASIAGO, a town of Northern Italy, deleg. Vicenza, cap. of the distr. termed the "Seven Communes," inhabited by a race of Germ. descent, 22 m. N. Vicenza. Pop. of the dist., 25,500; of the town, 4,670. It is celeb. for the manuf. of straw hats & all sorts of carpenter's work.

ASIA MINOR, or ANATOLIA, forms the western penin. of Asia, extending betw. lat. 36° & 42° N., & lon. 26° & 40° E., having E. Armenia & Mesopotamia, S. Syria & the Mediterr., W. the Ægean Sea, & N. the Sea of Marmora & Black Sea. Area estim. at 269,000 sq. m. Pop. 1844, 10,700,000. Two mntn. chains run nearly E. & W., the dist. betw., forming an elev. table land studded with mntns., while the country interior to this plateau is watered on each side by short rivs. The Taurus mntn. chain trends E. to W. near its S. coast, rising frequently to 8,000 or 10,000 ft. in height; & near the N. coast runs the other chain, less continuous & lofty, but comprising Mts. Olympus, Ida, & Gargarus, famous in classic literature. On the N.E. are the mntn. ranges of Anti-Taurus; elev. of the highest, Arjish Tag, 13,000 ft. N. of these is the Euxine or Lazian range. Shores greatly indented; principal inlets, the gulf of Adalia & Makri on the S.; those of Symi, Kos, Scala-Nova, Smyrna, & Adramyti, on the W., & those of Ismid & Sinope, on the N. coast. Chief rivs., the Kizil-Armak (anc. Halys), Yeshil-Irmak, & Sakaria (anc. Iris & Sangarius), flowing into the Black Sea; the Kodus, Grimalki & Mendere (anc. Hermus, Cuicus, & Meander), into the Ægean; the Sihún & Jyhoon (anc. Sarus & Pyramus), into the Mediterranean; & the Euphrates forming the E. frontier. There are numerous fresh & salt water lakes; Tuz-gol is the largest salt water lake, & yields a great quantity of salt. The climate varies with the locality, the elev. regions being cold & humid, the plains warm & fertile. The eastern part of the country is composed of volcanic rocks, the W. of calcareous strata with tertiary fossils. The mines produce copper, silver, lead, iron; alum, nitre, & rock salt are also abundant. Rice, barley, maize, sugar, cotton, indigo, tobacco, opium, & most of the products of S. Europe flourish; & the mntns. in the N. abound with good timber. Other products are wool, silk, gall-nuts, skins, furs, cochineal, madder, sponge, meerschaum clay. Manufs., leather, carpets, cotton & woollen stuffs, & a few other articles. The pop. consists mostly of Turks & Greeks, with some Armenians & Jews, & wandering tribes of Kurds, &c. Asia-Minor is divided into the pashs. of Anatolia, Itshil, Karamania, Sivas, Marash, & a part of Trebizond. Principal cities, Smyrna, Brusa, Trebizond, Kutayah, Angora, Konieh, (anc. Iconium), & Kaisariyeh (anc. Cæsarea), with Scutari, opp. Constantinople. Smyrna, Trebizond, & Brusa, are the principal seats of commerce; but all around the coasts are numerous small ports, where fairs & markets for the produce of the inland dists. are frequently held. This region was anciently the seat of the famous kdgms. of Troy & Lydia, & afterwards formed a proconsulship under the Romans. It produced Homer, Thales, Pythagoras, Herodotus, & many other of the most distinguished poets, philosophers, historians, & artists of antiquity; & ruins scattered over almost every portion of its surface, attest its former wealth & prosperity.

ASIATIC or EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO, the largest collection of isls. on the globe, extending along the equator, from the S.E. coast of Asia to the W. of Australia, comprehending a space betw. lat. 11° S. & 19° N.; & lon. 95° to 135° E.; having the China Sea on the N., the Pacific on the E., & S. & W. the Indian Ocean. The numerous isls. may be arranged under 5 groups.

1. Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Madura, Banka, Billiton, & the W. & larger portion of Borneo. This includes the western & larger isls., where the soil is good; to which may be added the adjoining Malay peninsula. Rice is cultivated, as well as some of the aromatic spices, as pepper, & the inhabs. are the most civilized of the Archipelago.
2. Celebs, Sumbawa, Flores, Timor, Sandalwood isl., & E. part of Borneo. This includes the central isls. where the soil is inferior. Rice not largely produced, & sago partly forms a substitute.
3. Ceram, Booro, Gillolo (Moluccа I.), Timorlaut, Arroo I., & Papua, the latter coming within the range of Australasia; this forms the eastern division, the climate & products of the soil of which differ from the two preceding. Aromatic plants, as the spices, characterize the Moluccа isls. Sago is the chief article of food, & the inhabitants are inferior in civilization.
4. Mindanao, Sooloo I., Palawan, & N.E. part of Borneo. This forms a central group N.E. of No. 2. Rice is produced, but sago forms the chief food. Spices of interior quality. The natives are superior in civilization to those in division 2.
5. Luzon, & all that portion of the Philippine isls. stretching from lat. 10° to 19° N. Soil & climate adapted for rice, tobacco, & sugar-cane, but not for spices. A different race of inhabs. from those of the other groups. These isls. lie within the range of the hurricanes.

The isls. of the Eastern Archipelago are all more or less of volcanic origin, & exhibit, at the present time, active volcanoes in numerous localities. The older formations, however, are also found forming the basis of many of the islands. Mntn. ranges of considerable height, as well as isolated mntns. are very prevalent: the elev. extending from 5,000 to 15,000 ft. Extensive valleys intervene, & dense forests of stupendous trees, & a most luxuriant & varied vegetation cover the whole surface of the soil; no arid or barren deserts existing. In the older primary & secondary rocks, metalliferous ores are abundant. Gold is found in various places, especially in Borneo & Sumatra; tin mines in the isl. of Banca; silver, copper, & iron in other localities; diamonds are found in Borneo; sulphur is abundant, as also lignite, naphtha, asphaltum; coal is found in Luzon & other localities, & native salt is procured from springs in Java. The climate is tropical, the solar heat tempered, however, by the insular condition of the land, & by copious moisture. In the Western isls. the thermometer ranges from 76° to 93° F. These isls. experience the atmospheric changes incident to the monsoons, & the N.E. isls. are within the range of the tropical hurricanes. A good soil, elevated temp., & genial moisture, produce a profuse & splendid vegetation. Palms, bamboos, & rattans grow universally; teak, ebony, sandal-wood, sassafras, areca, & resinous & gum-bearing trees in abundance. The clove, nutmeg, & various aromatic trees, abound in the Moluccas. Pepper, ginger, cubebs, & various spices, in Java & Sumatra. Cotton, tobacco, sugar, sweet potato, in the Philippines, & other islands. Flowers of the most splendid hues, mostly yellow & red, spring up in spontaneous abund.; & fruits, as the orange, lemon, shaddock, pomegran., pine-apple, guava, mango, durian, are very plentiful. The grains cultivated in the larger & more civilized isls., are maize, millet, pulses, & chiefly rice. Throughout the other isls., the amylaceous pith of the sago palm, (Metroxylon sago) is the chief food of the inhabs., forming in this locality, a peculiarity in the mode of human subsistence, not found in any other part of the world. Animals are no less abundant in this region than vegetation. The elephant is found in Sumatra, & the Malay peninsula adjoining. The tiger, panther, & other predacious animals, are not uncommon. The ox & buffalo, both large & of excellent breeds, are used in agriculture; deer & wild hogs abound, & the rhinoceros is not uncommon. Many species of the monkey tribe are found in various localities, & the orang-outang in Borneo. Birds of the most varied kinds & beautiful plumage fill the woods, as the argus pheasant, peacock, bird of paradise, & several useful species of domestic fowls, & a species of swallow, besides the edible nest so eagerly prized by the Chinese. Tortoises are numerous on the eastern shores, & fish, including the pearl-oyst., escaup, sole, abound in the seas. The Holothuria, or sea slug, another Chinese luxury, & oysters, & numerous shell-fish, are also common. The lac insect exists in most of the forests, & honey bees are numerous, but have not been domesticated. Two distinct races of men inhabit this region. The Malay, forming the great bulk of the pop., especially of the W. isls., is of a light brown or olive complexion, with long, straight hair, short stature, & robust body, round face, & small features. Strong & active in habits, in many communities, considerably advanced in civilization; in other situations, roving & restless pirates.—& differing also in physical form in many of the isls. The Papuan or black race have negro features & curly hair, small stature, & spare & puny form. These are in a ruder state, are less susceptible of civilization, & in many of the islands inhabit the interior of the country in a savage state. Many Chinese emigrants have settled in Borneo & other isls., & a small proportion of Hindoos. The Hindoo faith is professed by a portion of the native races, but Mahommedanism is the prevailing religion. Christianity has been partly introduced in the Europ. settlements. The Dutch possess Java, Madura, Amboyna, Banda, Timor, & part of Sumatra, & have some settlements in Borneo, Celebes, &c. The Philippines belong to Spain. Singapore is a British station for trade & shipping; & Labuan on the N.W. of Borneo, has recently been estab. for the same purposes. The exports to China are spices, scented wood, ebony, ivory, horns, tortoise shell, sharks' fins, edible bird nests, trepang, gold dust, drugs, European woollens & cottons; India, spices, gold, silver, & tin. The exports are greatly on the increase. The chief imports are black tea, coarse porcelain, wrought iron, cottons, silks, shoes, umbrellas from China; cotton cloths & chintzes from India; cottons, woollens, saddlery, & other manufactured goods from England. Particular details will be found under JAVA, SUMATRA, BANDA, MOLUCCAS, PHILIPPINES.

ASTRABAD, a city of N. Persia, cap. prov. of same name, situated near the S.E. corner of the Caspian Sea & Astrabad Bay. Lat. 36° 55′ N., lon. 54° 31′ E. Pop. uncertain; in 1831 it had been visited by the plague or cholera, & had not more than 4,000 inhabs. It is enclosed by a dry ditch & mud wall, 2 or 3 m. in circ., & is built mostly of wood. The town is pretty well drained & paved; but its few caravanseras & bazaars are ill supplied with goods, & its trade is confined to exchanges of horses, sheep, felt, & woollen stuffs brought hither by the Turkomans, for cotton, silk, & woollen fabrics, copper & iron wares, tobacco, &c., received by way of the Caspian.

ASTRAKHAN, or ASTRACAN, a gov. & administrative prov. of Russia, betw. lat. 45° & 49° 50′ N., & lon. 43° 30′ & 51° E., lying along the N.W. coast of the Caspian Sea, having E., N. & W. the govs. Orenburg, Saratov, & the country of the Don-Cossacks, S. & S.W. the Caucasus & the Caspian Sea. Area, 50,000 sq. m. Pop. 284,400. The climate is excessive; the mean ann. temp. 48° Fahr., that of summer 70° & winter 13°. The Volga divides the prov. into two nearly equal parts, which are mostly mere sandy deserts; the delta & banks of the rivers being the only productive dists., & there the fruits of S. climates are raised. The cultivation of the vine was introduced at the commencement of the 17th cent., & magnificent grapes are raised in the vicinity of Astrakhan. Very little corn is sown, & the produce is much below the wants of the pop. The rearing of horses, cattle, & sheep, sturgeon fishing, & procuring salt in the marshes of the Steppes, are the chief branches of industry. The annual value of the sturgeon taken in the Volga is estimated at from 2 to 3 mill. rubles; & above 30,000 barrels of caviar have been exported from Astrakhan in a single year. The pop. comprises besides Russians, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Kirghis, Bokharese, Persians, & Hindoos. The gov. is divided into 4 circles; its cap. Astrakhan, is the only place of importance.

ASTRAKHAN, a city of S. Russia, cap. gov. of same name, formerly cap. of a Tartar kgdm., built on one of the isls. formed by the Volga, at its embouch. in the Caspian Sea. Lat 46° 27′ N.; lon. 48° 6′ E. Pop. 45,703. It consists of a citadel called the Kremlin, the city-proper, & the suburbs. It has numerous churches, includ. the cathed. built by Peter the Great. The houses are almost entirely built of wood, & the streets are irregular, muddy, & unpaved. Its chief educational establishments are an ecclesiastical seminary, a gymnasium, & a botanic garden. Astrakhan is the seat of a Russ. archbp., an Armenian bishop, & an admiralty for the wood-yards at the mouth of the Volga, as well as a station for the fisheries of the riv. From its favorable position, communicating with the richest parts of the emp., & with the principal ports in the Caspian Sea, this city has become the entrepot between Russia, Persia, & India. It is also disting. for its industry; the chief branches of manuf., are cotton, silk, leather, & shagreen.

ATCHAFALAYA, an outlet of the Mississippi r., which it leaves a little over a mile below the mouth of the Red r., from a bend which in 1831 was made a "cut off" by the Mississippi taking a more direct course, & which shortened the distance from Natchez to New Orleans about 30 miles. Its course is very tortuous, & after a course of 147 ms. it enters a bay of the same name, 20 ms. long, which sets up from the Gulf of Mexico. It receives in its course, the Placquemine, another outlet of the Mississippi, & forms the W. boundary of what is called the delta of the Mississippi. Its navigation in the upper part is prevented by rafts, formed by trees floated down by the Mississippi. It is supposed that it once formed the outlet, or was a part of Red r., without any connection with the Mississippi, except in very high floods. There is a light vessel stationed in the bay, which shows a fixed light, elevated 70 feet above the water level.

ATHENS, Athenæ, the cap. of the kingdom of Greece, or Hellas, & of the gov. of Attica, is situated in a small plain on the N.W. side of the Gulf of Egina, between the rivers Ilissus E., & Cephissus W., 5 miles from its harbor, the Piræus. Lat. of the Parthenon, 37° 58′ 8″ N., lon. 23° 43′ 54″ E. Pop. 27,800, including garrison of 1,500 men. It is the residence of the sovereign, the seat of a university, & sup. courts of the Archbishop of Attica. The Acropolis, or anc. centre of Athens, on which most of its noblest monuments are placed, is an isolated rocky height, rising 150 feet above the adjacent plain, & 1,138 feet above the level of the sea. Its summit is enclosed by walls 2,330 yards in circuit. The mod. city is built mostly on its W. & N. sides, in which directions many new thoroughfares have been laid out, the principal being Minerva, Æolus, Hermes, & market streets. Since the establishment of the seat of government here in 1835, the old walls, which, during the Turkish rule, surrounded Athens, have been taken down, & well-built houses are springing up on every side. The new palace, built between 1836 & 1843, at the foot of Mount Lycabettus, & about ¼ mile from the centre of the city, is a quadrangular building, 300 feet in length by 280 in breadth, with two internal courts, a portico of Pentelic marble, & richly decorated apartments. In front is a square, in which the bloodless revolution of Sept. 15, 1844, was enacted. The university (founded 1836), is the finest modern building, & contains an anatomical theatre, & a library of 28,000 volumes, with 34 professors & teachers, & (in 1845) 195 students. There is, besides, a gymnasium, with upwards of 500 pupils, a military & an ecclesiastical academy, polytechnic, American-missionary, infant, & Lancastrian schools, a seminary for teachers, a botanic garden, & society of natural history. The cathedral is a handsome Byzantine structure, with a modern steeple. Other chf. mod. edifices are the barracks, civil & military hospitals, a new cathedral in progress of construction, an English chapel, Protestant & Greek cemeteries, royal mint, chamber of representatives, theatre & observatory. Athens has modern shops, hotels, lodging-houses, reading-rooms, & baths; but house-rent is exorbitant, & most necessaries are dear. Its manufs. are insignificant, the chief being walking-sticks & smoking-tubes made from the blackthorn of Parnassus & other classic spots. A good road now connects Athens with the Piræus (which see, for a notice of its foreign trade). Athens is reputed to have been founded by Cecrops, B. C. 1336; it fell to Rome B. C. 86, since then it has belonged successively to Goths, Byzantines, Burgundians, Franks, Catalans, Florentines, Venetians, & Turks. Principal antiquities, the Acropolis or anc. citadel surmounted by the Parthenon, an edifice of white marble, 228 feet in length by 100 feet in breadth, & still tolerably perfect; the Erechtheium, a building 90 feet in length; remains of the Temple of the Wingless Victory, recently restored in a judicious manner by the gov.; the Propylæa, or grand entrance in front of the foregoing temples; & the theatre of Herodes Atticus at the S.W. angle of the Acropolis. N. of the Areopagus is the Temple of Theseus, one of the most perfect monuments of ancient Athens, having thirty-four remaining Doric columns outside, & containing a rich museum of antiquities. Areopagus, or Mars' Hill, where St. Paul addressed the Athenians, the Pnyx, where popular meetings were held, the Eleusinium, the prison of Socrates, & Tower of the Winds, vestiges of the Temple & Theatre of Bacchus, the Grotto of Apollo & Pan. Outside the city, 16 Corinthian columns, 60 feet in height, on a raised platform, remains of the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, & near the Ilissus, the Stadium or ancient race-course is still traceable. Athens became the seat of the Greek gov. (removed hither from Nauplia), in 1835.

ATHOS, MOUNT, called Agion Oros, Monte Santo, or the holy mntn. by the modern Greeks, a celebrated mountain of Greece, at the extremity of the peninsula of Chalcis, 80 m. S.E. Salonica, cultn. point, 6,778 feet in elevation. Lat. 40° 16′ N.; lon. 24° 10′ E. Previous to the late Greek insurrection the flanks of this mountain were occupied by several villages, & 22 convents, besides 500 chapels, cells & grottoes, which served as the habitation of more than 4,000 monks; those called hermits lived in caves. In the intervals of their religious duties, these monks were employed in preparing the soil, cultivating vines & olives, & rearing many bees, which enabled them to export ann. a great quantity of wax. They also made numerous images & other objects in wood, which were shipped at the port of Ierissi, a fortified village on the E. side of the mountain, inhabited by 500 monks. This was the seat of the first ecclesiastical seminary of the Greek church, & its most celebrated theological school; here, also, was preserved the remains of the famous libraries which furnished to learned Europe the MSS. of so many master-pieces of ancient Greek literature. The ancient geographers assigned an extraordinary elev. to Mount Athos, & asserted that the sun was visible from its summit three hours earlier than on the shores of the Ægean Sea. Vestiges of the canal cut by Xerxes, to avoid the dangers of navigating the promontory, have recently been discovered.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, Atlanticus Oceanus, one of the five great hydrographical divisions of the globe, occupies an immense valley, & extends from the Arctic circle on the N. to the Antarctic circle on the S., bounded W. by the coast of America to Cape Horn, & thence by a line continued on the same meridian to the Antarctic circle, & E. by the shores of Europe & Africa to the Cape of Good Hope, & thence prolonged on the meridian of Cape Agulhas till it meets the Antarctic circle. Its extreme breadth is about 5,000 m., & its area is computed at 25,000,000 sq. m. It is naturally divided into three portions: 1st, the N.; 2d, the S.; & 3d, the intertropical Atlantic. The North Sea, or German Ocean, the Caribbean Sea, & the Irish Sea, form portions of the Atlantic, but the Baltic & the Mediterr., which communicate with the N. Sea by narrow channels, are properly considered separate seas. The principal gulfs of the Atlantic are, in Europe, the Bay of Biscay, or Golfe de Gascogne; in Africa, the Gulf of Guinea; in America, the Gulf of Mexico, & the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The chief islands are, in Europe, the British Isles & Iceland; in Africa, the Azores, Madeira, & Canary islands, & the Archipelago of the Gulf of Guinea; in America, the Antilles, Newfoundland, & the islands of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Atlantic, with its branches, drains nearly the whole of Europe W. of the basin of the Volga; all N. America E. of the Rocky Mountains & the Sierra Madre of Mexico; & the whole of S. America E. of the Andes. Its chief affluents are in Europe, the Rhine, Loire, & Tagus; in Africa, the Senegal, Niger, & Congo; and in N. America, the St. Lawrence & Mississippi; in S. America, the Orinoco, Amazon, & La Plata. The bed of the Atlantic is very unequal in elevation, in some places rising in immense sand banks to within a few fathoms of the surface, & in others sinking to great depths. In 1853 Lieut. Berryman, of the U. S. Navy, ran a line of deep sea soundings from the neighborhood of Newfoundland to Ireland, to test the practicability of finding a base for a submarine telegraph between America & Europe. Average depth, 12,000 feet. But farther south, Lieut. Berryman made a sounding (lat. 52° 55′ N.; 47° 58′ W. lon.) 39,600 feet in depth, equal to a little over 7½ miles. The most extensive banks are those of Newfoundland, the Dogger bank in the German Ocean, & the Agulhas bank off the S. point of Africa. The minimum depth on the bank of Newfoundland is 60 feet. The German Ocean varies in depth from 66 to 500 feet.

The trade winds blow regularly in the intertropical portion of the Atlantic; beyond these limits the winds are variable. The principal currents of the Atlantic are, the Equatorial current, which flows from the coast of Africa to the Caribbean Sea, with a velocity of from 20 to 70 miles a day, & the Gulf Stream, which, leaving the Gulf of Mexico, flows through the strait of Florida, with a velocity of 80 m. a-day, & a temperature of 86° Fahr., & extends with a gradually decreasing velocity & diminished temperature to the Azores. Immense numbers of fish are found in the Atlantic, & herring & cod-fishing are important branches of industry in the northern portion. A great part of the surface of the Atlantic between lat. 16° & 45′ N., & lon. 35° & 75° W., is covered with a species of weed (Fucus natans) of a beautiful green color, from which circumstance it is called the Sargazo Sea—the sea of duck-weed, or the grassy sea.

In the higher latitudes of the N. & S. Atlantic navig. is impeded by immense icebergs, which are floated from the polar regions, & although these are generally melted before reaching the frequented parts of the ocean, they have occasionally been met with as far S. as lat. 40° 45′ in the N. Atlantic, & in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope in the S. Atlantic Ocean. For extensive information on the navigation & currents of the Atlantic, see Maury's Wind & Current Charts of the Atlantic Ocean.

ATLANTIC, co., N. J., situated in the south part of the state. Area, 550 sq. m. Watered by Great Egg Harbor r. & its branches. ATLAS, a celebrated but little known mountain system of N. Africa, including all the heights in the Barbary states, as well as those which are dispersed through the regions of Sahara. The principal chain appears to extend from near Cape Nun, on the Atlantic, to the E. of the great Syrtis in Tripoli, traversing the Empire of Morocco, the colony of Algeria, & the regency of Tunis. The highest known points of the system are situated in Morocco, E. of the capital, & S. of the town of Fez, & the range diminishes in elevation as it extends towards the E. Several secondary chains detach themselves from the main system, & extend in different directions, one of which terminates at the strait of Gibraltar; these secondary ranges appear to be connected by intermediary mntns. which traverse Algiers & Tunis. The name Little Atlas is applied to the secondary range of the country of Sous, to distinguish it from the Great Atlas, which is confined to the elev. mntns. of Morocco. To the S. of Tripoli, several low ranges extend from the principal chain into the Sahara & the desert of Libya. The highest points, proceeding from W. to E., are estimated thus: Morocco, 12,789 ft.; Algeria, 7,673 ft.; Tunis, 4,476 ft.; Tripoli, 3,200 feet. The lion & panther inhabit the wooded regions of Mt. Atlas, but do not visit the desert. Snow lies for several weeks in winter on many of the higher ranges of Atlas, & it is seldom absent from the summit of Miltsin, lat. 31° 12′ N., 27 m. S.E. Morocco, which is ascertained to be 11,400 ft. in elevation. The Atlas & its ramifications inclose many valleys of luxuriant fertility, & its flanks are clothed with dense forests of pine, oak, cork, white poplar, wild olive, &c. In so far as has yet been ascertained, its composition is chiefly calcareous; copper, iron, lead, antimony & rock salt are abundant in it, but few mines are wrought to advantage. This noted range of mountains figures prominently in the mythology of the ancients, as being supposed to sustain the heavens!

AUSTRALASIA, (SOUTH ASIA,) a division of the globe forming a part of Oceania, extending between the equator & lat. 47° S., consisting of the continent of Australia, Tasmania, (Van Diemen's Land,) New Zealand, & those parts of the Eastern Archipelago & Polynesia, between lon. 130° & 170° E., viz.: Papua, the Arru isls., Timor-Laut, New Britain, New Ireland, New Caledonia, & the Admiralty, Salomon, New Hebrides, & Q. Charlotte's isls. Pop. 1,368,000. (?) Australasia is called Melanesia by the French geographers, on account of its inhabitants being chiefly of the negro race; they are extremely wild & barbarous, but varying in the shade of complexion as well as physical character. [POLYNESIA ASIATIC ARCHIPELAGO.

AUSTRALIA, New Holland, a vast extent of land composing the main portion of Australasia, and lying S. of the Asiatic Archipelago, between lat. 10° & 39° S., & lon. 113° & 154° E.; having W. the Indian O.; E. the Pacific O.; N. the Sea of Timor & Torres Strait, separating it from Timor, Papua, &c.; & S. Bass' Strait, dividing it from Tasmania, (Van Diemen's Land.) Length E. to W. 2,700 m.; greatest breadth about 2,000 m. Area, nearly 3 millions sq. m. Pop. in 1853, 500,000. The aboriginal pop. in the vicinity of the British settlements are rapidly on the decrease. Their numbers are estimated at 15,000 to 20,000. There are no data for the total aboriginal pop. of the country, which has been vaguely estimated at 500,000. Australia, like the continents of Africa & S. America, is but little indented with arms of the ocean, & presents no wide estuaries of rivs. The principal indentations are the Gulf of Carpentaria,—a considerable sea,—& Cambridge gulf on the N.; Halifax & Moreton bays on the E.; Port Philip, the Gulf of St. Vincent, & Spencer gulf on the S.; & Shark bay, with a few others on the W. coast. Botany-bay & Jervis' bay are inlets of small size, many of which are met with; & some of these, with the estuaries of the larger rivers, afford tolerable shelter; though, upon the whole, the coasts of Australia are deficient in good harbors. Only the S.E. part, with comparatively small sections in the S. & W., & an inconsiderable tract in the N., near Port Essington, have been yet thoroughly explored. Some useful expeditions have been conducted by Mr. Eyre, along the coast of the Gt. Australian Bight, & by Gov. Grey in the S.; & more recently Dr. Leichard & party have traversed the country between Moreton bay & Port Essington: while Sir T. Mitchell, in addition to his former explorations, has also penetrated through a part of the interior of Tropical Australia; but much of the interior is still a terra incognita, & we can only specify some features of its best known regions. In the S.E. a succession of mntn. range stretches from Gipps'-land to lat. 26° S., at a distance from the coast varying generally from 50 to 100 m. The Australian Alps, or Warragong mntns., belong to this chain, & are constantly covered with snow: Mt. Wellington, or Kosciuska, one of the peaks of this range, rises to the height of 6,510 feet; Mt. York (Blue mntns.) rises to 3,292 feet; & the Liverpool range, within the colony of N. S. Wales, reaches elevations of betw. 5,000 & 7,000 ft. Immense ravines in the latter range are said to have a perpend. height of 3,000 feet. In W. Australia, the Darling & other parallel ranges extend from King George Sound & Point d'Entrecasteaux N.ward to an uncertain distance, rising frequently to 2,000 or 3,000 feet above the sea. The N. coast seems to be mostly low & level, no hill higher than the mast of a sloop having been seen on it, by Flinders, in a run of 175 leagues along this coast. The only river system of the interior hitherto explored is that of the Murray, which is swelled by the Darling, Castlereagh, Peel, Macquarrie, Bogan, Lahelan, & Murumbigee rivers, its basin being known to extend through at least 10° of lat., & 18° of lon., & probably comprising a much greater extent. Other principal rivers are the Hunter, Hawkesbury, Shoalhaven, debouching on the E.; Blackwood & Grenelg on the S.; Swan & Canning on the W.; and Victoria, Adelaide, Liverpool, & Alligator, on the N. coast; but few serve to facilitate internal navigation. Princip. lakes are those of Victoria & Torrens in S. Australia; the latter, which appears to be merely a salt marsh in the dry season, has a remarkable serpentine form; but its entire extent has not yet been determined. It was conjectured that an inland sea occupied a considerable part of the unexplored interior, but hitherto no facts have transpired to confirm this opinion. Soil very various; a large part of the surface is occupied by extens. sandy deserts; elsewhere fine pasture & woodlands are met with; but it is remarkable that the best soil is on the hill slopes, the lowlands & valleys being commonly sterile, except in the N., where there is a fine alluvial plain country. A third part of the continent lies within the torrid, & the rest in the S. temp. zone. The climate is peculiar, & subject to great vicissitudes of temperature. The N. half of the country being mostly within the tropics & the range of the monsoons, is subject in summer (between November & April) to heavy rains, which, however, are very irregular in their occurrence, & last only for a few hours daily. In other parts of Australia, years of complete drought occasionally occur, followed by years of flood; but here the hot is also in general the dry season,—a circumstance favorable to health. The N.E. winds blowing over the sandy deserts of the interior are dry & hot, raising the therm. to 80° & 110 Fahr. On the other hand, the S. E. winds are often very cold, & frost sometimes happens in the lowlands even in June. Granite, sandstone, limestone, coal, & slates, are the chief mineral products, & rich ores of copper & lead have been recently discovered. Of 5,710 plants discovered in Australia, 5,440 are peculiar to this continent. Ferns, nettles, & grasses some of gigantic size, hard timber, gum & resin trees, with palms, myrtles, cedars, pines, prickly shrubs, & a multitude of odoriferous plants & grasses, are the chief vegetable products; but it is remarkable that there are, with one or two exceptions, no indigenous fruits. Timber in general is of inferior quality. Maize, wheat, flax, tobacco, indigo, vines, olives, & in some parts sugar & cotton, are successfully raised; but sheep-farming is the most flourishing branch of pastoral economy, & it is principally as a wool-growing country that Australia is rising into commercial importance. The indigenous quadrupeds hitherto discovered comprise 58 species, of which 46, including the kangaroo, wombat, & other pouched animals, are peculiar to Australia & its adjacent islands. The singular ornithorhyncus paradoxus is an animal found here only; & it may be remarked that in many particulars nature here assumes a form unparalleled in other parts of the globe. The native Australians are viewed by many as a distinct variety of the human race; &, certainly, their numerous dialects have no discovered affinity with any other language. Their skin is of an earthy black, hair straight, forehead low & full, nose broad, lips thick, stature short, frame slight, & more adapted to feats of agility than of strength. They live in roving tribes; &, though not deficient in intellect, are in their habits among the lowest in the scale of humanity—many tribes going completely naked, practising cannibalism, & having scarcely any notions of a Deity, or of social arts & order. They are not, however, intractable, devoid of generosity, or ignorant of the rights of marriage & of property. The frequent violation of these rights is, in fact, the occasion of constant wars among them, which, together with polygamy, incest, infanticide, scarcity of food, & the usual results of the contact of savages with whites, appear to be producing the gradual extinction of the race. Their numbers in & near the European settlements are not supposed to exceed many thousands; & the comparative scarcity of water, which has hitherto mainly prevented Europeans penetrating far into the interior of this continent, suggests a doubt as to its capapability of supporting any large uncivilized population. The Dutch or the Spaniards, about the beginning of the 17th century, were the earliest European discoverers of Australia, though little was known of it until Dampier. Wallis, & afterwards Cook, explored its various coasts. The favorable report of it by the latter was followed by the first British settlement at Port Jackson in 1788. The name of New Holland, given by the Dutch to the N. western coasts, first discovered by them, & subsequently extended to the whole of the mainland, is now supplanted by the more appropriate name of Australia. The British settlement of New South Wales, or Sydney, was made in 1788. The settlement of Western Australia, or Swan River, was established in 1829. South Australia, established in 1834, extends along the coast from Fowler's Bay in the W., to beyond Cape Northumberland, or from lon. 132° to 141° E., of which Adelaide is the capital. Australia Felix (Victoria), chief town Melbourne, established in 1837. North Australia was colonized in 1838. Australind, on the western coast, about 80 m. S. of Swan river, was established in 1841. [ADELAIDE, MELBOURNE, PERTH, SYDNEY, TASMANIA, VICTORIA.]

AUSTRIA (ARCHDUCHY OF), the central prov. & nucleus of the Austrian empire, & seat of its cap., comprised (including Salzburg) between lat. 47° & 49° N., & lon. 12° 10′ & 17° E., having N. Bohemia & Moravia, E. Hungary, S. Styria, Carinthia, & the Tyrol, & W. the Tyrol & Bavaria. Area, 15,052 square miles. Pop. 1850, 2,244,363; viz., 1,538,047 in Lower Austria (including Vienna), & 706,316 in Upper Austria. The Noric Alps, which form its S. boundary, next to Styria, extend their contreforts to the banks of the Danube, which traverses the province from W. to E.; the river Inn forms its N.W., & the March part of its E. frontier. It has numerous mountain lakes, & highly picturesque scenery. Forests & vineyards extensive. It is fertile, & admirably cultivated. Wheat, oats, & barley are raised, & it has been estimated that 25 mill. gallons of wine are made here annually. Its mineral products are highly important, & comprise gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, arsenic, alum, coal, & graphite. The weaving & spinning of flax, cotton, & wool, are the main branches of manufacturing industry. This prov. is divided by the river Enns into the govs. of Upper & Lower Austria (Land Ober & Unter der Enns). Lower Austria is subdivided into 4 circles—I. Lower Wiener-wald, cap. Vienna; II. Upper Wiener-wald, cap. St. Pölten; III. Lower Manhartsberg, cap. Korneuburg; IV. Upper Manhartsberg, cap. Krems; & the municipal district of Vienna. The regency of Lower Austria has its seat at Vienna, & is charged with the civil administration of the prov. Upp. Austria is subdivided into 5 circles—I. Mühl, cap. Linz; II. Traun, cap. Steyer; III. Hausrük, cap. Wels; IV. Inn, cap. Ried; V. Salzburg, cap. Salzburg; & the regency is established at Lintz. The military affairs of the archd. are directed by the military commandant of Vienna, who has under him the military comm. of Linz. After Vienna, the chief cities are Linz, Wiener-Neustadt, & Salzburg.

AUSTRIA (CIRCLE OF), an old subdiv. of Germany, which comprised Austria-Proper, or Lower Austria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, & the Tyrol, bounded N. by Moravia, Bohemia, & the circles of Bavaria & Swabia; W. Switzerland; S. Lombardy & Istria; & E. Croatia & Hungary—most of which territories are now included in the Austrian empire.

AUSTRIA, EMPIRE OF (Germ. Oesterreichische Kaiserthum, Fr. Empire d'Autriche), a state of Central Europe, cap. Wien (Vienna), situated chiefly between lat. 45° & 51° 2′ N. (but extending in Dalmatia to lat. 42° 9′ N.), & lon. 8° 35′ & 26° 35′ E., bounded N. by Russia, Prussia, Saxony, & Bavaria; S. by Parma, Modena, the Pontif. States, the Adriatic, & the Ottoman empire; W. by Lichtenstein, Switzerland, & the Sardinian States; & E. by the Russian Empire. Area, 258,723 sq. m. Pop. in 1850, 36,514,466. The principal part of the territory presents the form of an oblong square, parallel with the equator lengthwise, & its centre is indicated, nearly, by the position of Pesth, on the Danube. Three great mountain systems cover the empire with their ramifications, the Alps in the S.W., the Bohemian & Moravian mountains in the N.W., & the Carpathians, forming a great curve, the one extremity of which abuts on the Danube at Pressburg in the N.W., & the other at Orsova in the S.E. The most elevated summits are in the Alps of Tyrol, where the Ortlerspitz attains the height of 12,821 feet, next the Lomnitzerspitz in the Carpathians, 8,861 feet, & 3d the Schneekoppe in the Riesen Gebirge, the culminating point of the mountains of Bohemia & Moravia, 5,275 feet. The most mountainous countries are the Tyrol, Salzburg, Upper Styria, the W. part of Upper Carinthia, & the E. part of Transylvania. Austria contains many extensive plains, remarkable for their uniform level; the principal of these are the plains of Lower Austria, on both sides of the Danube, the plains of Hungary, the plain of Slavonia, & that of the Po, the greater part of which belongs to the empire. Austria is most abundantly supplied with water nearly all of which is collected into six great rivers, viz., the Danube & the Dniester, flowing to the Black Sea; the Po & the Adige, to the Adriatic; the Vistula to the Baltic, & the Elbe to the German Ocean; it contains also a great many lakes, the most important of which are, in the mountain regions, the lakes Maggiore, Como, Lugano, Iseo, & Garda, on the S. slopes of the Alps; & in the plains, the Platten-See, & Lake Neusiadel, the two most extensive sheets of water in the empire, in Hungary, which country, from its flatness, contains also the greatest number of marshes. The principal gulfs are those of Venice, Triest, Quarnero, & Cattaro. The Austrian empire is comprised between the isotherm lines of 60° & 50°. The Alpine region is the most rainy country in Europe; the greatest amount of rain falls in the N. of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, & the least in Hungary & Dalmatia. Storms are rare in L. Austria, & become more frequent in the S. The annual proportion is 8 in Vienna, 28 in Hungary, & 42 in the plains of Venice. Volcanic phenomena are only met with in Dalmatia. Earthquakes occur in Dalmatia, Illyria, Hungary, & Transylvania. Glaciers & snow fields are confined to the Alps at an elevation of 8,000 feet. The soil in such an extensive territory is very varied; the plains of Italy & Hungary are the most fertile, next, the countries of Galicia, Bohemia, Moravia, Austria-Proper, & Styria. The flora of the Austrian States comprises the different grains, & wild & cultivated plants common to the countries of Central Europe, as vines, hops, tobacco, saffron, & a great variety of fruit-trees; a third part of the productive soil is covered by forests. The Alps & the mountains of Bohemia & Moravia produce the pine, the beech, & the larch; while the forests of Hungary, Galicia, Transylvania, & the military frontier furnish the oak, beech, & elm. The empire may be divided into the three following zones of vegetation:—S., the zone of olives & rice, between lat. 42° & 46°; central, that of the vine & maize, between lat. 46° & 49°, & N. that of grain, hops, & hemp, between lat. 49° & 51°. The vegetation of these zones is modified by the elevation of the soil; thus the vine ceases at a height of 1,750 feet; the oak at 3,000 feet, cereals generally at 4,500 feet, pines at 6,000 feet, & pasture at the limits of snow in the Alps. Among the faûna of Austria may be noticed the bear (in the Alps & Carpathians), the wolf & the fox, the lynx, & the chamois in the high Alps, the jackall in Dalmatia, the marten, otter, marmot, & beaver, the wild boar, & wild cat, the stag, deer, hare, & rabbit. Eagles & other birds of prey inhabit the mountains, & herons are plenty in the plains. Fish is abundant in most of the streams, & leeches are exported in immense quantities from the marshes.

Austria is among the richest mineral countries in Europe; there is gold in Transylvania & Hungary, silver in Hungary, Bohemia, Transylvania, & Styria, mercury in Carinthia, tin in Bohemia, copper in nearly all the provinces, lead in Carinthia, iron in all the countries except on the low shores of the Adriatic; antimony in Hungary, salt in Galicia, Transylvania, & the Tyrol, & coal in all the provinces. The empire contains also all kinds of building materials, & precious stones, & is especially rich in mineral springs, the most celebrated of which are at Karlsbad, Töplitz, & Marienbad.

According to race & language, the entire population is divided thus:—

Germans	6,700,000	Armenians	22,100
Slavonians	16,500,000	Jews	641,000
Italians, &c.	6,700,000	Gipsies	77,000
Illyrians	3,300	Magyars	5,900,000
Greeks	6,600	Tartars	170,000

The pop. belongs to four principal families—the Deutsch or German, Slavonian, Italian, & Hungarian or Magyars. German is the language of the countries inhabited by the first-named family, & the idiom employed by the superior administration; the different Slavonian dialects by the 2d; Italian, & a mixed dialect by the 3d; & the Magyar by the 4th. French is the diplomatic language of Austria. Agriculture is in many parts of the empire in a very backward state,

& it is computed that the country could support at least double the present amount of its population. In Styria, Illyria, & the Tyrol, the rearing of cattle forms the chief branch of agricultural industry, & the produce of wine is abundant. Lombardy & Venice raise a great amount of wheat, maize, & rice, the extent of the latter being only restricted by sanatory considerations. The rearing of silk worms is also one of the chief sources of wealth in the prov. Galicia & Bohemia produce grain in great abundance. Moravia & Silesia are in general well cultivated, & the produce exceeds the wants of the population. Hungary also yields abundance of grain. Cattle forms one of the chief sources of wealth; they are reared in great numbers in all the Alpine countries. Horses are numerous & of a good breed; & there are fifteen varieties of sheep. Mining is one of the chief branches of industry in the empire. Since the peace manuf. industry has made great progress in Austria. The most import. articles produced are woollens, linens, cotton, silks, steel, & wood & glass wares. The principal goods imported are colonial products, oils, corn, cattle, cotton, & cotton yarn, hides, skins, & metals; principal exports, silk, wool, woollen goods, glass, steel, linen, & hemp manufs., timber, & seeds. The means of communication in Austria are extensive, & many of the great routes, as that of the Simplon, are remarkable as works of art; & its territory is extensively traversed by railroads, for which see appendix. Steam packets are established on the Danube, & on the lakes of the Lomb.-Venetian Kgdm., in which provs. canals are numerous. The Austrian monarchy is composed of states which recognize the same sovereign, but are governed by different laws; it takes the first rank in the states of the German confederation. The crown is hereditary by order of primogeniture in the male, & failing it, in the female line. The constitution was abolished on the 31st Dec., 1851, & it now forms an absolute monarchy. Nearly each prov. has distinct usages & peculiarities of government. The census of 1850 gave the number of R. Catholics as 26,357,172; of Greek communicants, 6,856,700; Protestants, 3,448,564; Unitarians, 50,541; Jews, 729,005; other sects, 2,350. The Greek Catholics & the Protestants mostly inhabit the E. provs.; the Unitarians are nearly confined to Transylvania. The administration of public instruction is under the direction of a separate commission, & extends to all parts of education, & the public schools are subject to uniform laws—they are classed into high schools, gymnasiums & classical schools, & elementary schools. The number of national schools (exclusive of Hungary, Transylvania, & the military frontier) is 28,380, & pupils, 2,605,801, being nearly 1 to every 10 of the pop. There were, in 1848, 9 universities, having their seats at Vienna, Prague, Padua, Pavia, Pesth, Lemberg, Grätz, Innsbruck, & Olmütz, with 419 professors, & 15,794 students. The military force of the empire is composed of a standing army, & an army of reserve (Landwehr). The permanent force in time of peace is 406,000 men, & during war, 738,624. The navy is composed of 93 sailing vessels, mounting 681 guns, & 11 steam vessels, carrying 61 guns. There is, besides, an armed flotilla on the Danube. Austria possesses a great many fortifications, of which Josephstadt, Theresienstadt, Olmütz, Mantua, Peschiera, & Comorn, belong to the 1st class; Peterwardein, Brod, Altgradisca, Arad, Eszeg, Karlstadt, Karlsburg, Munkatsch, Temeswar, Ragusa, Cattaro, Zara, Legnago, Venice, Kufstein, Salzburg, Prague, & Königgrätz, to the 2d class. Austria also maintains garrisons in Mentz, Piacenza, Ferrara, & Comacchio. The public revenues arise from direct taxes on property, industry, & incomes, with personal & Jews' taxes, indirect imposts on tobacco & provisions, a salt monopoly, legacy & stamp duties, post-office & custom dues, & the revenues from the crown domains & mines. The greater proportion is contributed by Bohemia, Galicia, Illyria, & the German & Italian provs.; Hungary contributes a certain sum & supports a fixed number of troops; & in Dalmatia a tithe of the land produce is taken in lieu of taxes. The revenue is $108,277,238; expenditure, $135,034,000 annually; national debt, $593,528,353. Paper money in circulation June, 1851, 418,909,575 fl. Imports 1850, 158,955,400 fl. Exports, 104,847,500.

AUSTRIAN ITALY comprised, in 1848, the Lombardo-Venetian kgdm., the Italian Tyrol, & a great part of the govt. of Triest, in Illyria.

BAALBEC or BALBEC, the Baalath of scripture, & Heliopolis of the Greeks, a ruined town of Syria, formerly a city of great size & magnificence, sit. on the lowest declivity of Anti-Libanus in a valley opening into the plain of El-Bekaa, 43 m. N.W. Damascus, lat. 34° 1′ 30″ N., lon., 36° 11′ E. Its remains, more extensive than those seen anywhere else in Syria, except at Palmyra, comprise three temples, two formed with immense stones, besides numerous columns, altars, & the vestiges of the city walls, 3 to 4 m. in circuit. The date of its origin is lost in remote antiquity. A great temple, one of the wonders of the world, was erected by Antoninus Pius. It continued a place of great importance down to the time of the Moslem invasion, was sacked A. D. 748, & finally pillaged by Timur Bey in 1400. The present vill., to the E. of the ruins, has fallen greatly into decay, & contains about 2,000 inhab. Some of its ruined buildings were probably erected as late as the age of Hadrian or Antoninus Pius; but others are evidently of a much earlier date, & answer to the account given of the "House of the Forest of Lebanon," built by Solomon. BADEN, (GRAND DUCHY OF), (Germ. Grossherzogthum Baden), a State of the German Confederation; cap. Carlsruhe, sit. betw. lat. 47° 32′ & 49° 52′ N., & lon. 7° 27′ & 9° 50′ E., occupying the angle formed by the Rhine on turning northward at Basle. Bounded N. by Bavaria & H. Darmstadt; E. by Bavaria, Würtemberg, and the principalities of Hohenzollern; S. by Switzerland, & W. by France & Rhenish Bavaria. Area, population & subdivisions as follow:

Circles.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1859.	Chief Towns.
Lake (Constance)	1,303	199,955	Constanz.
Upper Rhine	1,654	340,205	Freiburg.
Middle Rhine	1,633	462,085	Carlsruhe.
Lower Rhine	1,314	346,578	Mannheim.
Total	5,904	1,35 ,914

Of the above there were Roman Catholics, 905,143; Protestants, 432,184; Dissenters, 479; Mennonites, 1,421, & Jews, 23,547. Surface mountainous, covered for four-fifths of its extent by the mass of the Schwarzwald (Black Forest) with the contreforts which extend from it; the Alp, the Heiligenberg, & the Randen, are on the E., and on the S. the Schwarzwald and Odenwald, which bound the E. valley of the Rhine, from which they rise abruptly, and form a chain of plateaus gradually descending towards the N., & varying from 2,000 to 4,000 ft. in elev. The culm. points are the Feldberg, 4,875 ft; the Kandel, 4,160 ft.; the Blauen, 3,882 ft. The Katzenbuckel sumt. of the Odenwald, 2,300 ft: the Randen, 2,600 ft; and the Kaiserstuhl, an isolated volc. mass near Briesach, 1,900 ft. The whole W. part of the territory is a continuous plain, formed by the val. of the Rhine, & extending betw. it & the mtns. from Basle to Mannheim. Principal rivers, the Rhine, which forms the S. & W. boundary of the State, the Murg, Kinzig & Weisen-Mayn, Neckar & Danube, which last rises in the grand duchy. The Lake of Constance forms part of the S.E. frontier, and there are several small lakes in the interior. The climate is very mild in all the valley of the Rhine; rigorous in the mountain districts, the summits of which are only free from snow during the height of summer. The vine is cultivated at an elev. of 1,400 feet. The soil is in general very fertile, especially in the valleys of the Rhine & Neckar. Agriculture constitutes the chief wealth of the state, and is conducted with more skill than in any other part of Germany. Barley, wheat, maize, potatoes, fine hemp, flax & tobacco are raised. The cultivation of fruit-trees is extensively carried on, & fruit is grown in great abundance. The produce of wine in ten recent years averaged upwards of 13,400,000 gallons annually. The meadows are irrigated in the Italian style. Great attention has been bestowed on improving the breeds of sheep, and cattle are extensively reared. Produce of timber estimated at nearly one million cubic fathoms annually; masts of 150 feet in length, & fine oak timber, are floated in rafts to the mouth of the Rhine. Mineral products comprise salt from springs, alum, vitriol, sulphur & coal, iron, copper, lead, & a little silver: gold washing, formerly pretty general along the Rhine, is now insignificant. The duchy is extremely rich in mineral springs. Manufactures have of late materially increased; the principal are cotton-spinning & weaving, riband making & the production of beet-root sugar. Important branches of industry in the Schwarzwald are the manufs. of straw-plait, wooden ornaments, watches, clocks, jewelry, musical boxes & organs. Principal exports, timber, wine, corn & kirchwasser, salt, linen & cotton goods, wooden clocks, straw hats & paper. Principal imports, colonial produce, drugs, wool, horses, fruits, iron & steel, silk fabrics, & articles of luxury. The accession of the duchy to the Prussian Customs' Union in 1835, has greatly increased the transit trade, which is favored by the creation of free ports at Constance, &c., & by steam navigation on the Lake of Constance, the Rhine, Neckar & Main. The lines of road are in general excellent, & a railroad extends along the whole length of the territory from Basle to Mannheim, with branches to Kehl & Baden. Gov. exercised by the grand duke, a chamber of peers, and a chamber consisting of 22 deputies from towns, & 41 from rural districts; & was known as the most tolerant & liberal in Germany. The majority of the population is Roman Catholic, but the reigning family is Protestant. The grand duchy possesses an excellent system of public instruction, & the schools are numerous. Attendance at school is obligatory on all children; & each village has at least one primary school. Baden has two universities, among the most ancient & celebrated in Germany; that of Heidelberg has a faculty for Lutheran, & that of Freiburg for Catholic theology. The former has 65 professors & 955 students, & the latter 219 students. There are 11 preparatory schools, 1,916 common schools, & 65 other schools. There are 4 public libraries in the grand duchy. Circle judicial courts, subordinate to the supreme court at Mannheim, sit at Constance, Freiburg, Mannheim & Rastadt. Public revenue, 1852, 19,536,497 florins; expenditures, 19,545,723 florins. Baden holds the 7th place in the German confederacy, & has 3 votes in the full council. Contribution to confederate army, 10,000 men. The regular army consists of 15,000 men.

BAGDAD, PASHALIC OF, (Chaldæa Mesopotamia,) an extensive region of Asiatic Turkey, of which it forms the S.E. portion, mostly between lat. 30° & 38° N., & lon. 40° & 48 E., having N. the pashalics Diarbekir & Van, W. & S. Syria & Arabia, E. Persia, & at its S.E. extremity the Persian Gulf. Length from N.W. to S.E. 550 m. Breadth, 350 m. The Euphrates & Tigris flow through the dist. for about 950 m., when both these rivers unite at Korna, in lat. 31° N., & lon. 47° E. The united river now called Shat-al-Arab flows into the Persian Gulf. The country E. of the Tigris includes Koordistan & Khuzistan; the plains of the former are fertile, producing grain & fruit; the latter, though possessing a good soil, is almost a desert waste; it is, however, famed for its dates. The country to the W. of the Euphrates is a flat sandy desert, without water, & destitute of herbage; with the exception of the banks of the river, which are very fertile. The lower part is healthy, producing abundant rice crops. That part of the dist. comprehended between the Tigris & Euphrates, consists of Al-jezirah towards the N., a barren desert, & Irak Arabi, beginning where the two rivers approach near each other, to the N. of Bagdad, & extending to the Persian Gulf. This, which was one of the most fertile countries in the time of Herodotus, is now almost a complete desert. The pop. of the pashalic is very mixed, consisting of Arabs, Kurds, Turkomans, Armenians, Turks, Jews; some of whom, as the Arabs & Kurds, are but imperfectly subject to the Porte, & live under different chiefs, often at war with each other. Principal cities, Bagdad, Bassorah, & Mosul. In this region may be traced the sites of the anc. Babylon, Nineveh, Ctesiphon, & Seleucia; the memorable field of Arbela, where Alexander finally broke the power of Darius, & many other localities famous in sacred & profane history, are within its limits.

BAGDAD, a city of Asiatic Turkey, cap. of above pashalic, & formerly of the Saracen caliphate, on the Tigris, 220 m. above where the united rivers enter the Persian Gulf. Lat. 33° 19′ 40″ N.; lon. 44° 24′ 45″ E. Pop. 65,000, (?) mostly Arabs & Turks. It stands on both sides of the river, its two portions being connected by a bridge of boats; it is enclosed by a brick & earthen wall, flanked with large towers, & is about 5 m. in circumference, including gardens & plantations of date-trees. Streets narrow, irregular, & houses in general meanly built; but some fine old structures remain, comprising the "gate of the Talisman," a lofty minaret built in 785, the tomb of Zobeide, wife of the caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, the tomb of a Turkish saint of the 12th century. The edifice of its famous college, founded in 1233, now serves for a caravanserai & the custom-house. A citadel, though of no great strength, here commands the passage of the Tigris. There are about 100 mosques, many of them with lofty domes & minarets. The bazaars are large, & abound with most of the goods sold in European markets. Red & yellow leather, silks, & cotton stuffs are manufactured, and this city was long the great emporium of all the surrounding countries; but its commerce has declined since Persia has received European goods from the N. by way of Trebizond, & on the S. direct from India & the Persian Gulf. Bagdad has still, however, a large trade with Aleppo & Damascus, whence it imports cotton twist, calicoes, shirtings, prints, imitation shawls, dyes, & to which it exports tombac, galls, buffalo hides, E. India indigo, pearls, Cashmere shawls, coffee. Its climate is generally healthy, but great heats during a part of the year oblige the inhabs. then to live underground. This city, built out of the ruins of Ctesiphon, was founded by Almanzor in 763, & continued to flourish under succeeding caliphs, until sacked by Hoolagoo in 1259. It has been held by the Turks since 1638.—Bagdat is a small fortifd. town, Asiatic Russia, gov. Transcaucasia, dist. Imeretia, 15 m. S.S.E. Kutais.

BALKAN, Hæmus, an important mountain chain of European Turkey, which extends from the plain of Sophia, lon. 23° E., to Cape Emineh on the Black Sea, forming a series of peaks of little elevation, the highest of which are covered with grass & fruit trees. Few of the peaks are distinguished by local names, & these are generally derived from the nearest towns. The name Kodja Balkan is limited to the portion of the anc. Hæmus, W. of the Balkan of Shipka. The W. part of the Gt. Balkan runs S.S.E. to N.N.W., & separates Bulgaria from Upp. Mœsia, on the N., whilst on the S. it serves to connect the Hæmus with Mt. Rhodope. The chain in general is 4,900 feet in elevation; N.W. of Kalofer it rises to 5,325 feet. It slopes abruptly S. to the alluvial plain of Tartarbazardjik & Philipopolis, but terminates more gently on the N. by means of the crests of the Balkan of Etropol. Its waters flow chiefly in transverse valleys. Snow lies on the higher summits till the month of June, but entirely disappears in July. The E. part of the Balkan consists of a series of minor chains decreasing in elevation as they approach the plains of the Danube on the N., and the Black Sea on the E. The Emineh Dagh is 2,660 feet in elevation. The Balkan is connected with the mts. of Middle Europe by the ranges of Monte Negro, Herzegovina, & the Dinaric Alps on the W., & the mountains of Greece on the S. The deep & narrow gorges permit of paths difficult for beasts of burden; & the range is traversed by only one great route, that of the gate of Trajan by which the communication is kept up between Vienna & Constantinople.

BALTEE, or BALTI, Asia. [BULTI.]

BALTIC PROVINCES, is the name applied to the Russian governments of Courland, Esthonia, Livonia, & St. Petersburgh, with the principality of Finland, situated on the Baltic Sea.

BALTIC, or EAST SEA, Mare Balticum (Germ. Ostsee), an extensive Sea of N. Europe, enclosed by Sweden, Russia, Prussia, Mecklenburg, & Denmark, & communicating with the Kattegat & the North Sea by the Sound & the Great & Little Belts. It extends from Swinemünde in the S. to Tornea in the N. about 900 m., & from Carlscrona in the W. to Memel in the E. about 180 m., & its area, including the Gulf of Bothnia, occupies a space of about 125,000 square geographical miles, or little less than the North Sea. Notwithstanding its great extent the Baltic has all the characteristics of an inland sea or great lake. No sea has, in proportion to its size, so great an influx of fresh water, hence it contains but little salt. In proportion to the North sea this is found to be as 194 to 373. The N. part of the Baltic is generally called the Gulf of Bothnia; on the E. are the Gulfs of Finland & Riga, on the S.E. the Gulf of Danzig, & on the S.W. the Gulf of Lübeck.

The depth of the Baltic on the W. is not more than 15 fathoms, & in general it is only from 8 to 10 fathoms deep; on the S. it is nowhere more than 50 fathoms; but towards the N. it deepens to 100 fathoms. The Baltic receives the waters of the Motala-Elv, the lakes of Mælar, Onega, & Ladoga, the Düna, Niemen, Vistula, & the Oder, besides numerous smaller streams. The great amount of sand & mud carried down by the rivers has considerably raised the bottom of this sea, & closed the mouths of many of its navigable streams, so that ships which formerly entered these rivers, must now be anchored at a considerable distance from their mouths. This, together with the numerous islands & sandbanks, & the gradual upward movement of the bed of the sea, (at the rate of several feet in a century), renders navigation on the Danish shores of the Baltic troublesome & dangerous. The chief islands of this sea are those of the Danish Archipelago, between the coasts of Jutland & Sweden; the islands of Rugen, Bornholm, Öland, Gottland, Dago, & Oesel, the group of Aland, & that of Holmon. The Baltic has no tides, or rather the effect of the tide is so little felt as not to be observable; but it is subject to changes of level, depending on the winds, retarding or accelerating the passage of the water through the sound & the belts. Thus, during a N.E. wind the S.W. portion of the sea is often raised as much as 4 feet above the usual level of the North Sea. This has led to the erroneous opinion that the Baltic is always higher than the German Ocean; on the contrary, after N.W. gales & during spring tides the Atlantic rises, & pouring a flood into the Baltic, commits great havoc among the islands of the Danish Archipelago. The great amount of water which flows into the Baltic, especially during the melting of the snow in spring, occasions a general current in the direction of the ocean; & it has been calculated that the number of days in which the water flows into the Kattegat, is in proportion to those in which it follows in an opposite direction, as 24 to 1. During winter this sea is usually frozen to a greater or less distance along the coasts; & in severe winters, not only the sound & the belts, but a great part of its surface is covered with ice. In the reign of King Christopher (1324) the Baltic was frozen so hard, that for 6 weeks the people travelled between Denmark & Germany on the ice. The Baltic contains abundance of fish, & a great quantity of amber is gathered on its S. shores. The most important ports are St. Petersburg, Riga, Königsberg, Danzig, Stralsund, Lübeck. Copenhagen, Carlscrona, Stockholm, & Christiana.

BALTIMORE, city, port of entry, metropolis of the State, & capital of Baltimore co., Md. The third city in extent, population & commerce in the United States; situated on the north side of Patapsco river, 10 m. from its entrance into Chesapeake Bay, & 200 m. from the Ocean by ship channel. In 39° 17′ 23″ N. lat. & 76° 37′ 30″ W. lon.

It is by railroad route 38 m. from Washington, 98 from Philadelphia, 186 from New York, 590 from Pittsburg, & 590 N.E. from Charleston. Pop. in 1790, 13,503; 1800, 26,514; 1810, 35,583; 1820, 62,738; 1830, 80,625; 1840, 102,313; 1850, 169,054; 1854, with environs, 200,000. The branch of the Patapsco river, around which the city is built, is about a mile & three quarters long, & varies from one-eighth to three-quarters of a mile in width, having its greatest breadth opposite to the tract called Canton. It affords an easy access to the city, & a capacious, safe & well protected harbor of a depth & extent sufficient to float ships of the largest class, & to afford ample accommodations for at least two thousand vessels. Its harbor consists of an inner basin, at the wharves of which vessels drawing ten or twelve feet of water may lie, & an outer bay lying between Fells Point & Canton on the north & east, & Whetstone Point on the south, with from sixteen to twenty feet of water. Ships of heavy burden do not go up higher than the Point. From the facilities offered by the depth of the water, the Point is also the seat of the principal shipyards from which have been launched some of the finest & fleetest vessels of the American marine, which are especially noted for beauty of proportion & excellence of construction. The name of Baltimore clipper is synonymous all over the world, with all that is beautiful in naval architecture, & perfect in the requisites of a staunch & well-appointed ship.

The city is built principally on the north side of the Patapsco, & extends around its western termination; its location is picturesque, & its appearance, especially from the direction of Fort McHenry, (situated on the point of a peninsula at the mouth of the harbor,) is attractive & imposing. It stands upon uneven ground, the higher points of which afford many beautiful views of the river, the bay, & the adjacent country. The boundaries of the city are extensive, the streets are broad & generally cross each other at right angles, with the exception of those in the vicinity of Jones' Falls, a stream that traverses the city from north to south, dividing it into two portions. Indeed Baltimore may be regarded as made up of three parts originally distinct, but which have gradually spread out so as to meet each other and form a whole, viz.: Baltimore Town, which at first occupied a small tract on the west side of Jones' Falls; Old Town, which was early & separately settled on the east side of the Falls; & the village of Fell's Point, which grew up to the S.E. of that stream on the outer basin.

The public buildings are the City Hall on Holliday st., a plain edifice three stories high, has a portico & an entablature supported by four massy columns; it is a substantial & convenient building occupied by the City Council & several public offices; the Court House, corner of Washington & Monument sts., a large & commodious building appropriated to the City & County Courts & their connected offices; it is 145 feet long & 65 wide, & two stories high, constructed of brick & marble. The building is elevated several feet above the adjacent streets, & is approached by a flight of steps leading to a platform supporting several Tuscan columns, & the edifice is surmounted by a cupola of imposing appearance. Its interior arrangements are such as to render it one of the finest court houses in the Union. The Exchange, between Water & Gay sts., is a splendid building, 225 ft. long & 141 ft. deep, & three stories high above the basement; the room where the merchants assemble is 53 feet square; the edifice has colonnades of six Ionic columns on the E. & W. fronts, the shafts of which are single blocks of Italian marble, of fine workmanship, & the whole is surmounted by a dome 115 feet above the street. The Custom House is entered from Water st., & has a spacious saloon divided by colonnades into three apartments; the officers' desks are ranged between the columns, & the centre is occupied by persons in prosecution of their business. The State Penitentiary, corner of Forrest & Madison sts., consist of three separate edifices. The centre building is occupied by the keeper's family, officers & guards, the W. wing by the female convicts, & the E. W. has 320 dormitories ranged on both sides of the building for male convicts; there are also ranges of workshops extending 250 feet in length & 25 in width, & some of them two stories high, though mostly but one. The prisoners work together by day & are confined in separate cells at night. The county prison, near the Penitentiary, is a neat building with a semi-octagonal tower at each end; it is two stories high & is surmounted by a neat cupola.

The Roman Catholic Cathedral, corner of Mulberry & Cathedral sts., is built in the form of a cross, 160 feet long, its breadth 77 feet, & its height from the floor to the top of the cross, which surmounts the dome, 127 feet; the building is well lighted from the dome; there is an elliptical arch between each of the supports of the dome, one of which, at the head of the cross, forms the exterior of a lesser dome, above the grand altar. The altar is very imposing, both in its architecture & its decorations. The church has one of the largest organs in the United States, having 6,000 pipes & 36 stops. It contains two fine paintings, the one the descent from the cross, presented by Louis XVI., & the other, St. Louis burying his officers & soldiers slain before Tunis, presented by Charles X. of France. At the W. end rise two tall towers crowned with Saracenic cupolas. The Unitarian church, corner Charles & Franklin sts., is admired for the beauty of its architecture; it is 108 feet long & 78 wide; in front is a colonnade consisting of four Tuscan columns and two pilasters, which form three arcades; from this portico five bronze doors, in imitation of those of the Vatican at Rome, open, three conducting to the body of the building, & two to the galleries. The interior of the church is a square formed by four equal arches of 33 feet span, which support a dome of 55 feet in diameter. The summit of the cupola is 80 feet high, & terminated by a star of light passing through the glass at the top of the dome, being an imitation of that of the Pantheon at Rome. The organ, in external shape, resembles a lyre, the perpendicular pipes, representing the strings, has 1,400 pipes & 22 stops. The whole interior of the building is finished with neatness & taste. St. Paul's Episcopal church has a lofty tower & steeple, & is an imposing edifice. The first Presbyterian church has 2 towers surmounted by cupolas; and the first Baptist church, with an Ionic portico & circular dome, is a prominent building. The churches belonging to the various denominations are as follows: 4 Baptist, 2 Campbellites or Disciples, 1 Covenanter, 12 Episcopal, 3 Friends, 3 German Reformed, 8 Lutheran, 45 Methodist, 12 Presbyterian, 15 Roman Catholic, 1 Church of God, 3 Jews Synagogues, 1 Unitarian, 1 United Brethren, & 1 Universalist; value of church property $2,420,200.

The Washington Monument, at the intersection of Charles & Monument sts., is the most imposing structure in the city. It is a Doric column rising from a base 50 feet square & 20 feet high. The shaft of the column is 180 feet high & 20 feet in diameter, hollow, with a winding staircase on the inside, by which it is ascended to the top, where is placed a Statue of Washington 13 feet in height. The whole is constructed of white marble. From it may be enjoyed a commanding, picturesque & extensive view of the city & its environs. The Battle Monument, 52 feet in height, at the corner of Calvert & Fayette sts., was erected in 1815, in memory of those who fell defending the city when attacked by the British in 1814. The base is of the Egyptian order, & rises to the height of about 20 feet from the ground, lessening in breadth as it ascends; on each front is a doorway, & the whole is surmounted with a deep overhanging cornice, with the winged globe & other symbols. Above the base the column rises in the form of a Roman fasces, on the bands of which are inscribed in letters of gold, the names of those who fell in the battle which it commemorates. The whole is surmounted by a female figure emblematical of the city. The Monument is constructed of fine white marble. These, with other works of art have caused Baltimore to be denominated the "Monumental City." There are six markets in the city. The public springs or fountains enclosed by circular railings & covered by small neat open temples consisting of columns supporting a dome. There are several, & are denominated the city springs. Water is brought from an elevated part of Jones' Falls in an aqueduct half a mile long into a reservoir in Calvert sts., & thence distributed in pipes over the city.

The literary & scientific institutions of Baltimore are various & highly respectable. The Maryland Institute was established for the promotion of the mechanic arts, & the diffusion of scientific knowledge by means of lectures, &c., & has a fine chemical laboratory, & a very complete philosophical apparatus. The University of Maryland was incorporated in 1812. It has a faculty of Arts & Science of Physic, of Theology & of Law. The first has 7 professors, that of Physic 7, of Theology 3, & that of Law 4. It is well supplied with materials for anatomical studies, & has a good chemical laboratory. Lectures commence on the last Monday in October. Washington Medical University, which has 7 professors, has an annual session of four months, beginning on the last Monday in October. Baltimore College, which constitutes the collegiate department of the University of Maryland, is under the general supervision of the regents of the University, & the particular direction & management of a president, assisted by different professors & teachers. Loyola College & seminary has 20 professors or other instructors, 122 students, & 19,600 vols. in its libraries; commencement the third Tuesday in July. The Maryland college of Pharmacy, incorporated January, 1841, has a president, two vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, & a board of three examiners. The Baltimore College of Dental Surgery has a president & 5 professors. The Mercantile Library Association, founded in 1839, has a library of 5,000 vols. The Maryland Historical Society is located in Baltimore. Maryland Hospital on Hampstead Hill, in the eastern extremity of the city, is under the management of a board of visiters appointed by the State. Mount Hope Hospital, in the northern part of the city, is under the management of the Sisters of Charity; it will contain 100 patients. The Baltimore Infirmary, connected with the medical department of the University of Maryland, is under the direction of the faculty of physic. A number of the public schools have handsome & convenient edifices. The charitable & benevolent institutions are numerous. Among these the hospital in the northeastern suburbs has a commodious building commanding a fine view of the city & surrounding country, which cost $150,000. The Almshouse, the City Dispensary, several orphan asylums, & various other societies for the relief of human sufferings, are conspicuous. Of places of amusement, there are two theatres, a circus, a museum, two assembly rooms, & a concert hall for musical entertainments. The commerce of Baltimore is extensive & rapidly increasing. The receipts for the year ending 1853, were 406,000 tons of Cumberland, & 183,000 tons of Anthracite coal, 35,003 bales of cotton, 3,411,965 bushels of wheat, 3,906,494 bushels of corn, 780,000 bush. of oats, 160,000 bush. of rye, 13,000 bush. of peas, 4,000 bush. of beans & 83,000,000 ft. of lumber. There were 1,181,603 barrels of wheat flour inspected, 5,394 of rye flour, & 38,478 of corn meal. Imports, of coffee, 208,702 bags; molasses 3,820 hhds., 632 tierces & 72 barrels from the West Indies, & 192 hhds., 115 tierces & 13,187 barrels coastwise; of sugar, New Orleans & West Indies, 12,582 hhds., & 14,350 barrels; tobacco inspected, 40,667 hhds.; wool, foreign & domestic, 900,000 pounds; mackerel inspected, 12,597 barrels; herrings, 29,000 barrels; shad, 6,671 barrels. Tonnage registered, 92,772,46; enrolled & licensed, 65,706,14; total, 158,478,60. The number of vessels built was 71 & their aggregate tonnage 18,391,62. There were in 1853 12 banks with an aggregate capital of $7,292,315, a savings bank, & 8 insurance offices; there were 20 printing offices issuing 5 daily, 4 tri-weekly, 8 weekly newspapers, 1 semi-monthly & 3 monthly publications.

Manufactures:—A great amount of water power is concentrated in the vicinity, which has been extensively improved for manufacturing purposes. Jones' Falls, a small stream which passes through the city, has a succession of falls which afford considerable water power. The Patapsco, though not a large river, has a fall of about 800 feet in the course of 30 miles, affording many valuable mill sites. There are within 20 m. of the city sixty flouring mills, besides numerous cotton manufactories & other mannfactories of cloth, powder, paper, iron, copper, glass, steam engines, chemicals, tobacco, &c.

The whole number of industrial establishments in 1850, was 2,243, in which was invested a capital of $6,541,922, employing 15,442 male & 5,044 female artisans. The aggregate value of raw material consumed in 1849–'50 amounted to $9,444,244; the sums paid out for wages monthly, $459,441; & the annual value of manufactured products was $20,416,511.

The communication of Baltimore with the surrounding country is greatly facilitated by several important railroads. The Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore r. r. connects with Philadelphia, a distance of 98 miles. The Baltimore & Ohio r. r. extends to Wheeling, on the Ohio r., 380 m. It constitutes the most direct communication between the Atlantic coast & the valley of the Mississippi. The Washington branch of the Baltimore & Ohio r. r., extends to Washington, 38 m., & the Annapolis & Elkridge, branches off near the latter place, & extends to Annapolis, a distance of 41 miles from Baltimore. The Baltimore & Susquehanna r. r. extends to Harrisburg, & connects with a chain of railroads to Philadelphia. Baltimore has lines of steam packets to New York, Philadelphia & Norfolk, & other packet lines to New York & to various places on the Atlantic coast.

The municipal government in Baltimore is vested in a mayor & city council. The city council consists of two branches, one consists of two members from each of the twenty wards into which the city is divided, & are elected annually by the people. The other consists of one member from each ward, & are elected every two years by the people. The mayor is elected for two years by twenty electors, one from each ward, chosen by the people. The two branches of the common council sit in separate chambers, & have a negative upon each other, & the Mayor has a veto upon both unless overruled by a vote of three-fourths of both houses.

Baltimore was first laid out as a town in 1729. In 1765 it contained only fifty houses. It was chartered as a city in 1797. Few towns in the United States have risen more rapidly, a proof of its natural advantages. Its growth has been healthy & it is destined to future & great advancement. Baltimore during the last war sustained a combined attack by a British force of about 12,000 troops & forty or fifty vessels. Sixteen ships of the British squadron on the 13th September, 1814, bombarded Fort McHenry for twenty-four hours, but were repulsed. The troops landed at North Point on the 12th, to the amount of 9,000 men, & proceeded to within six miles of the city, where they were met & opposed by the Baltimore brigade under Gen. Stryker, consisting of 3,200 men; a severe battle ensued, & the British commander, General Ross, fell early in the engagement, which was continued by the second in command. The Americans retreated towards the city, & were slowly followed by the enemy on the 13th. But fearful least their retreat should be intercepted, they precipitately retired on board the fleet & left the Chesapeake. It was to commemorate this heroic defence of the city that the Battle Monument was erected.

BANG-KOK, or BANKOK, the cap. city of Siam, & one of the most commercial cities in Asia, on the Menam, about 20 m. above its mouth. Lat. 13° 38′ N., lon. 100° 34′ E. Pop. from 50,000 to 60,000, ½ half of whom are Chinese. It stretches along both banks of the riv., & consists of three portions,—viz., the palace or citadel, on an isl. enclosed by walls, & comprising the residences of the sovereign & court, with many temples & gardens; the city proper; & the floating town, composed of movable bamboo rafts, each bearing rows of 8 or 10 houses. It has numerous Buddhic temples; & in the palace is a spacious audience-hall. The more solid buildings are of brick; but the majority of the dwellings are of wood, mounted on posts. Most of the intercourse is carried on by water, & the Menam is navigable to the city for vessels of 250 tons. Bangkok has manufs. of tin & iron wares, & leather. Exports comprise sugar, (from 10,000 to 12,000 tons yearly,) black pepper, (4,000 to 5,000 tons,) tin, cardamoms, fine woods, ivory, cotton, rice, hides, horns, skins, & feathers. The country around is flat, but contains rich mines of iron, & extensive forests of teak.

BANGOR, city, port of entry & capital of Penobscot co., Me. Situated on the rt. b., & at the head of navigation on Penobscot r., in 44° 47′ 50″ N. lat., & 68° 47′ W. lon., 68 E.N.E. Augusta, 120 m. N.E. by E. Portland, 230 m. N.E. Boston, 663 W. The pop. in 1790 was 169; in 1800, 277; in 1810, 850; in 1820, 1,221; in 1830, 2,668; in 1840, 8,627; 1850, 14,432; 1854, 20,000. Kanduskeag stream, 190 yards wide at its mouth, divides the city into two parts, connected by three bridges. One mile from its entrance into the Kennebec, this stream has falls, affording extensive water power. Immediately above the city, a bridge 1,320 ft. long crosses the Penobscot r. & connects it with Orrington. The harbor directly below the mouth of the Kanduskeag is spacious, having a breadth of 90 rods, & sufficiently deep for vessels of a large class. The Penobscot is navigable to the city, the tide rising to the height of 17 feet. In the winter season, for about four months, the river freezes 12 miles below, to Frankfort. The trade is extensive, particularly in lumber, of which it exports a greater quantity than any other town in the United States. Quantity surveyed during the year 1853, 182,942,284 feet. There are in the city 63 lumber establishments. Twelve hundred vessels of over 100,000 tons burden are employed, when the river is open, in the transportation of lumber; there are 100 vessels employed in the coasting trade, & 50 in foreign commerce, & about 20 in the fisheries. Ship building is an extensive business. The situation of the city is pleasant & commanding, affording a fine view of the Penobscot r. & of the surrounding country. Its back country is extensive, & contains much fertile land, the capabilities of which, time & good cultivation will develop. The country between the Penobscot & Kennebec rivs. contains the most fertile part of Maine, & the soil about the higher portions of the Penobscot will probably prove equally productive. The immense amount of pine lumber which this country affords, gives employment to innumerable saw mills, & when this resource shall fail, agriculture will supply its deficiency. The rise of Bangor has been rapid, & is already the great emporium of the eastern portion of Maine. The public & private buildings are many of them neat & elegant. It contains a court house, city hall, custom house, academies, schools. The building of the Bangor Theological seminary, 10 churches,—2 Baptist, 2 Congregational, 1 Episcopal, 2 Methodist, 1 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, & 1 Universalist,—7 banks, with an aggregate capital of $725,000, an Insurance office, 8 commercial houses, 16 wholesale & 160 retail stores, 3 grist m., 3 iron foundries, 1 brass foundry, 3 machine shops, 1 edge tool factory, a file fac., a screw fac., a saw fac., 3 tanneries, 7 saddleries, 5 carriage factories, 4 hat fac., &c., &c.; there are 2 daily & 4 weekly newspapers pub.; cap. employed, principally in the manufac. of lumber, $301,100; value of manufac. articles, $4,075,310. Tonnage of the port 1853, 32,000. The city is governed by a Mayor, 7 Alderman, & 21 common councilmen. The Bangor Theological Seminary, located here, was incorporated in 1814, & went into operation at Hampden, 6 m. S.,—since which it has been removed to this city. It is under the direction of the congregationalists, & gives a classical & theological course in 4 years, has three professors, 45 students, 202 alumni, & has 9,000 vols. in its libraries. (See Old Town.)

BANJERMASSIN (Banger water, massin salt), an extensive country of Borneo, occupying the S.E. part of the island, bounded W. by the riv. Banjer, & E. by the Strait of Macassar; it is intersected from N. to S. by a range of mountains, some of which are upwards of 3,000 feet in elevation, & watered on the W. by the Banjer, & its tributary the Nagara, & E. by several large streams. Pop. 1846, estimated at 120,000, nearly all Mohammedans. It is governed by a sultan, whose power is absolute, except in so far as limited by treaties with the Netherlands government; all the diamonds, above 5 carats, found in the mines of Banjermassin, are considered the property of the sultan; but the Netherlands government receives a tribute equal to one-tenth of the value. The inhabitants of Banjermassin are celebrated for the manufacture of all kinds of arms, guns, pistols, swords, &c., which are finished in the most elaborate style. The chief seat of this manuf. is Nagara, a district of 10,000 inhabitants, extending on both sides of the river of same name, N.E. the Dutch fort of Marabahan. The iron of Doussen (so called from the river of same name), is employed in the manuf., & serves in place of money with the Aborigines; the gold, copper, & silver, used in decoration, is imported. The sultan imposes a tax of ten per cent. on all the arms exported. Excellent coal was discovered in this territory in 1846, & is extensively worked by the Netherlands government.—Banjermassin, the fortified capital of the Dutch residence, is sit. on the left bank of the river Banjer, about 15 m. from its mouth, in the Java Sea, lat. 3° 23′ S., lon. 114° 37′ E.; as the mouth of the river is obstructed by a bar, large vessels anchor at Tabeniow, a port on the coast, about 50 m. S. of the town. Banjermassin has an extensive trade with China; its chief exports consists of pepper & other spices, gold dust, diamonds, wax, camphor, rattans, edible birds' nests, & small arms. Imports piece goods, opium, cutlery, & gunpowder. The Dutch have had a factory here since 1748, & the territory was ceded to them in 1787; a German mission to the Dyaks was established here in 1837.

BATH, Aquæ Solis, a city & parl. & municipal bor. of Engl., cap. co. Somerset, on the Avon, here crossed by 2 stone, 2 iron, & 3 suspension bridges, and on the Great Western r. r., 12 m. E.S.E. Bristol, 100 m. W.S.W. London. Lat. 51° 23′ N., lon. 2° 22′ W. Area of bor., 980 ac. Pop. 1851, 54,240, but this number is in summer frequently augmented by 14,000 visitors. Bath was known to the Romans under the name of Aquæ Solis; & baths were erected in the reign of Claudius. The earliest extant charter is that of Richard I., which was confirmed by Henry III., and extended to its present form in reign of George III. The city stands enclosed by an amphitheatre of hills, on the W. declivity of which its finest quarters extend in successive terraces; & being mostly built of white freestone, in a highly embellished style of architecture, is allowed to be the handsomest city in Britain. It has 61 churches,—5 Baptist, 1 Brethren, 1 Catholic Apos., 28 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 2 Independent, 1 Jews Synagogue, 12 Methodist, 1 Moravian, 1 Mormon, 3 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, & 3 isolated congregations. Principal edifices, the Abbey church, in the latest Gothic style, 210 feet in length, & with a tower 170 ft. in height; St. James', St. Michael's; the guild hall, city jail, a superb theatre, the freemasons' lodge, subscription club-house, assembly & concert rooms, several large & flourishing hospitals, & the buildings connected with its famous baths. In the W. of the city is the Royal Victoria Park; & it has numerous other favorite promenades & places of public recreation, among which are the Sidney gardens. Bath has many educational & other establishments: among which are a grammar school, founded by Edward VI., & to the mastership of which is attached the rect. of Charlcombe; bluecoat & national schools; Partis' college for thirty decayed gentlewomen, the hospital of St. John the Baptist, a Roman Catholic collegiate establishment, the Bath & West of England Society, Bath literary and philosophical institution, a public subscription library, & a mechanics' institute. The hot springs, to which this city owes its origin, are saline & chalybeate, temp. 90° to 117° Fahr.; they rise immediately on the bank of the river, & supply five distinct establishments, the King's, Queen's, Cross, Hot, & Abbey baths. The first four belong to the corporation, & yield a revenue of £1,600 ann. To the King's bath is attached the great pump-room, a saloon 85 feet in length, 48 in breadth, & 34 in height, & containing a marble statue of the celebrated "Beau Nash," the arbiter of fashion at Bath for fifty years during the last century, and to whom the city owed much of its prosperity. The Abbey baths are the property of Earl Manvers, & are furnished in a style adapted for the wealthy classes, by whom, however, Bath has ceased to be frequented so much as formerly; having been superseded by Brighton, Cheltenham, &c. Its former manufactures of coarse woollens, termed "Bath coating," has greatly declined; its shops, however, are generally as well supplied as those of London, which they rival in appearance. The city is well situated for general commerce, & communicates with Bristol & various other towns by the Kennet & Avon canal. Bath sends two members to H. of C. Markets, Wed. & Sat. Fairs, Feb. 14 & July 10. Races on Lansdown, adjacent, the week after Ascot races, besides a spring meeting. Bath Rhenish Bavaria belongs exclusively to the basin of the Rhine, which forms its E. boundary; it is watered by the Lauter, the Queich, & the Nahe. A small portion of the lake of Constance belongs to Bavaria; its other principal lakes form a chain along the S. slope of the Alps; they are the Ammer-See, in the bed of the river of the same name, the Würm-See, on an affl. of the Ammer, & the Chiem-See, formed by the riv. Alz. Its smaller lakes are the Staffel-, Kochel-, Walchen-, & Königs-See. The country is in general elevated & mountainous; the Alps, on the S., have, in the Zugspitz, an elev. of 10,150 ft. The highest points of the Böhmerwald, on the E., between Bav. & Bohemia, are Arber, 4,613 ft., & Rachelberg, 4,561 ft.: its most remark. offset is the Bayerische-wald, betw. the Danube & Regen. The other principal chains are the Fichtelgebirge, on the N.E., in which the Schneeberg is 3,481 ft. in elev. This range is connected on the N. W. with the Thüringer-wald, & on the N.E. with the Erzgebirge. The Frankischer Jura is a branch of the Fichtelgebirge, which extends S. between the Regnitz & the Vils. The N.most chain of Bav. is the Rhöngebirge, culm. point the Kreuzberg, 3,000 ft. in elev. S. W. of this is the Spessart, an offset of the Odenwald, in which the Hohewart is 1,968 ft. in elev. In Rhenish Bav. the chief mntn. is the Hardt, the culm. point of which, the Donnersberg, is 2,300 ft. in elev.

The principal plains are the Donau moos, on the S. of the Danube, between the Lech & the Paar. The valley of the Lech, above & below Augsburg, & that of the Isar, between München & Freising.

The climate of Bavaria is temperate & healthy; although, on account of the general elevation of the surface, it is colder than the other countries of Germany sit. further north. The soil is one of the most fertile in Central Europe; the mntns. yield excellent pasturage, & are covered with vast forests of valuable timber. Grain is cultiv. to an elev. of 3,280 ft.; forests reach to 5,300 feet; & grazing extends to 8,500 feet, or the line of perpetual snow, which occurs only on the higher Alps.

The wealth of the country consists almost entirely in its agricultural produce. Besides the ordinary kinds of grain, a small quantity of buckwheat & maize is cultivated. The wines of Franconia, in the valleys of the Main, the Saal, & the Taüber, are much esteemed, especially those called Steinwein & Leistenwein, from the banks of the Leiste, near Steinberg. Rhenish Bav. also produces excellent wines, particularly those of the neighborhood of Deidesheim & Wachenheim. The hops of Bav. are esteemed for their excellent quality. Fruit is cultiv. in consid. quantities, as well as hemp, flax, linseed, beet-root, & liquorice. Cattle rearing is the exclusive industry of the inhabs. of the Alps; sheep, of which the breed has been much improved of late, are of great importance in Mittelfranken, & pigs & goats are extensively reared in Unterfranken. The rearing of silkworms, which was recently introduced, has not yet attained any importance.

Although the soil of Bavaria is rich in useful minerals, they have never been extensively worked. Salt, coal, & iron, are the princip. products. Salt, which is government monopoly, is produced by evaporation, & from the rich mines of Berchtesgaden, Reichenhall, Traunstein, Rosenheim, Kissingen, Soden, Orb, Dürkheim, & Philipsthal. Iron is worked everywhere throughout the territory. Small quantities of copper, manganese, cobalt, & mercury, are produced in Rhen. Bav. There are numerous quarries of excellent marble, alabaster, gypsum, & building stones; & the porcelain clay is reckoned the best in Europe. Among the many mineral springs with establishments of baths, the most frequented are those of Kissingen, Brückenau, & Rosenheim.

Manufacturing industry is but little developed in this country. Its principal branch is the brewing of beer, which is much esteemed & carried on to a vast extent, there being upwards of 5,600 breweries in the kingdom. Linen weaving is carried on to a considerable extent; woollen & cotton are not manufactured in sufficient quantity for home consumption. The other chf. manufs. are tanning, paper-making, working in wood & straw, hardware, beet-root sugar, tobacco, & porcelain. The jewellery of Augsburg, & München is much esteemed, as are the mathematical & optical instruments of the capital; the tobacco & toys of Nürnberg, the wooden clocks of the Rhöngebirge, the porcelain of the royal manuf. of Nymphenburg, & the pottery of Deggendorf & Hafnerzell, called "Pottery of Passau." Next to Augsburg & Nürnberg, the chf. seats of manuf. industry are Ansbach, Bamberg, Fürth, Menningen, Schweinfurt, & Würzburg.

The commerce of Bavaria is almost exclusively confined to agricultural produce. The exports are estimated at about £6,000,000 annually, & consist of grain, timber, wine, cattle, salt, hides, wool, hops, fruits & fruit-trees, liquorice, madder, butter, cheese, glass, & jewellery. The chf. imports are cotton, sugar, coffee, & other products, silks & woollen fabrics of fine qualities.

Bavaria has for centuries possessed the transit trade between N. Germany & Austria, Switzerland & Italy. The roads are in general bad, & railroads have not been extensively constructed. (See Table in Appendix.)

The great routes of navigation are: the Danube & the Rhine, traversed by steam packets, & the Main. The other navigable rivers are: the Inn, the Salzach, Regnitz, & Altmühl. The chf. floatable rivs. are the Weisse Main, the Rodach, the Iller, Lech, Wertach, Isar, & Loisach. Ludwigs-Kanal, connecting the Rhine & the Danube, is likely to become one of the most important in Europe. [See ALTMUHL.] Among the establishments most favorable to commerce are the exchange banks of Nurnberg, Ansbach, & München. Bavaria joined the Zoll-Verein (Prussian Commercial Union) in 1833.

Bavaria is a kingdom, & its form of government is a constitutional monarchy. The throne is hereditary in in the male line. The constitution dates from 25th May 1818, & no change can take place without the concurrence of the national states. The executive power belongs to the king; the ministers & all functionaries are responsible. The legislative functions are exercised concurrently by the king & the two chambers of the national states, but the royal prerogative is very extensive. Public Revenue 1851, 34,785,685 fl.; expenses, 37,325,516 fl., leaving a deficit 2,539,831 fl. National Debt 1851, 136,995,620 fl. The kingdom is divided into 2 Catholic archbishoprics, those of München & Bamberg; 6 bishoprics, 171 deaneries, & 2,756 parishes. The direction of the Protestant religion is under a general consistory (Ober-consistorium), & 4 prov. consistories, at Bayreuth, Kreuz-Werthiem, & Spire. The proportion of the different sects are, Roman Catholics, 3,060,694; Protestants, 1,181,216; Reformers, 2,717; other christians, 4,836; Jews, 59,288. Public instruction is more limited in Bavaria than in several other German states; it has, however, been much improved of late. Its direction is under the minister of the interior. Elementary schools (Volks schule) exist in all the parishes, & attendance on them is obligatory for children till the age of 14; & after leaving them they are bound for two years more to attend a Sabbath school. The kingdom possesses 3 universities, 2 of which (München & Würsburg) are Catholic, & 1 (Erlangen) Protestant. In 1847 the Univ. of München had 76 professors, & 1,471 students, of whom 125 were foreigners; in 1846-7, Würzburg had 521 students, 72 of whom were foreigners; & Erlangen had, at same date, 364 students, of whom 7 were foreigners. Besides the numerous elementary schools, Bavaria has a school of forests at Aschaffenburg, re-estab. 1843; a school of husbandry (landswerthchaft) at Schleissheim; a mining school at Steben, a seminary for students, 9 lyceums, 26 gymnasia, 60 Latin schools, 9 normal schools, 3 polytechnic schools, 1 royal school of architecture, 1 school of trades, 22 schools of rural industry, 1 blind, & 1 deaf-dumb school, & 5,400 common schools. The capital possesses scientific & literary institutions, & collections of art among the most extensive in Europe, besides important academies & national societies.

The armed force of the kingdom comprises the permanent army, the army of reserve, & the militia (landwehr). Every male, without exception, is liable to serve; but the sons of the nobility have the privilege of entering the military school of cadets. The army is raised by conscription, & the period of service is four years, from the age of 21 to 25. The permanent army in time of peace, amounted in 1851 to 71,540 men, besides 4 companies of veterans, of whom about one-third are usually under arms. In case of war, depôts are formed for infantry & cavalry. The landwehr is organized & armed in two levies.

Bavaria, formerly an electorate of the Germanic empire, was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon, at the peace of Presburg, in 1805. As one of the states of the Germ. confed. it holds the third rank, & has four votes in full council. Its military contingent was 35,600 men, forming the 7th corps of the federal army.

BELFAST, a parl. & munic. bor., & manuf. & seaport town of Ireland, Ulster, co. Antrim, at the head of Belfast Lough, where it receives the Lagan, about 12 m. from the Irish Sea, & 86 m. N.N.E. Dublin. Lat. 54° 36′ 8″ N., lon. 5° 55′ 53″ W. Area of parl. bor. 1,871 ac. Inhabited houses in 1851, 13,965. Pop. 99,660, of whom 7,000 are in the suburb of Ballymacarret, co. Down, with which it communicates by 3 bridges across the Lagan. The town is well built, paved, drained, & lighted; & in the general appearance of its streets, as well as in its steadily advancing prosperity, is equalled by few other manuf. towns in the empire. It has numerous places of worship, including about 7 of the Established Church, 10 Presbyterian (several Arian), & 3 Roman Catholic chapels; a Royal Academic Institution incorp. 1810, partly supported by gov., & comprising a college & 2 large schools, open to persons of all religious denominations, having 19 professorships & about 400 pupils; the Belfast Academy, & numerous other schools; an incorp. poor-house, with infirmary, a union workhouse, large dist. lunatic asylum, deaf & dumb, & blind asylums, various other hospitals; an extensive bridewell, an exchange, brown & white linen halls, a custom-house, public library, theatre, mechanics' institution & museum, barracks, botanic garden & music-hall; 5 banking companies, a chamber of commerce, societies of history, natural history, statistics, music & fine arts. Ten newspapers are published in the bor. Belfast is the principal depôt of the Irish linen trade, & the chief seat of the cotton manufs. of Ireland. It has many large linen & cotton mills, mostly wrought by water power; extensive distilleries, breweries, foundries, ship-yards, rope & sail-cloth factories, flour mills, glass, soap, & tobacco fac., dye-works, & numerous bleaching-grounds in its vicinity. About ten steamers ply regularly to London, Liverpool, Dublin & Glasgow. Vessels drawing about 15 feet approach the quays & enter the docks of the town. Those much exceeding that draft, discharge a part of their cargo at Garmoyle, on the lough, 4 m. below. The inland trade of Belfast is facilitated by a canal connecting the Lagan with Lough Neagh, & by a r. r. to Armagh, 25 m. S.W., & another to Antrim & Randalstown on the N.W. A r. r. from Cave-hill, 3 m. distant, is used for conveying stone to the quays. Mkts. Frid. Fairs, 12th Aug. & 8th Nov. Belfast sends 2 members to H. of C. General & petty sessions are held in the bor., which has a very efficient police. In the vicinity, which abounds in fine scenery, are good public promenades, & many handsome seats, including that of the Marquis of Donegal, who is lord of the manor, & to whose eldest son the town gives title of earl. The borough was incorporated by charter of James II.—Belfast Lough is an inlet of the North Channel, 12 m. in length N.E. to S.W., & 7½ m. in width at its entrance.

BELGIUM (Fr. Belgique, German Belgien; anc. a part of Gallia Belgica), a kingdom of Central Europe, situated betw. lat. 49° 30′ & 51° 30′ N., & lon. 2° 33′ & 6° 5′ E., having N. the Netherlands, E. Dutch Limburg & Luxemburg, & Rhen. Pruss., S. & S.W. France, & W. the North Sea. The area & pop. of the provs. are thus stated in the official report, 1849:—

Provinces.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. in 1849.	Chief Cities.
Antwerp (Anvers)...	1,094	413,824	Antwerp.
W. Flanders.....	1,243	711,332	Bruges.
E. Flanders.....	1,154	626,847	Ghent.
Hainault.....	1,430	781,143	Mons.
Liege.....	1,111	723,539	Liege.
Brabant (South).....	1,260	460,663	Brussels.
Limbourg (part of).	929	185,621	Hasselt.
Luxembourg (part of)	1,695	187,978	Arlon.
Namur.....	1,397	268,143	Namur.
Total.....	11,313	4,359,090

Surface in the N. & W. uniformly flat, or slightly undulating. The coasts are low & protected against the encroachments of the sea by dykes & sand downs, as in Holland,—though no part of Flanders is below the sea-level. The centre is undulating, & the S. & E. provs. are mntnous., being traversed by the Ardennes mountains, which enclose the valley of the Meuse, & sep. its basin from that of the Moselle, rising to 2,000 feet in elev. The whole terr. belongs to the basin of the Germ. Ocean, & is among the best watered countries of Europe. Chief rivers the Meuse (Maas) & Scheldt, with the Rupel, Demer, Senne, Dendre, the Haine, Durme, & the Lys, tribut. to the former; & the Ourthe, Vesdre, & Ambleve, Mark, Dommel, Geer, Mehaigne, & Sambre, affits. of the latter. Climate humid & cool; unhealthy in the low parts of Flanders & in the prov. of Antwerp. Mean temperature of 7 years at Brussels, 50° 4′ Fahr.; extreme heat 91° 6′ Fahr.; extreme cold minus 3° Fahr.; prevailing wind S.W. The soil in general fertile, especially so in Flanders; sandy & sterile in great part of the provs. Antwerp & Luxemburg. In the mntnous. regions the riches consist in fine forests & abundant mineral products. The country is estimated to yield double the quantity of corn required for home consumption. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, & buckwheat, are extensively cultivated. Potatoes, oil-seeds, madder, flax, & hemp, are grown chiefly in Flanders; hops, beet-root, chiccory, & tobacco, are raised in the central provs. Flanders is famous for its agriculture. Only some inferior kinds of wine is produced on the banks of the Meuse. Horticulture is an important branch of industry. Horned cattle are most numerous in Flanders. From 7,000 to 10,000 of the large Flemish draught horses, & about 2,000 colts, are annually exported, princip. to France & the Pruss. dominions; & in late years great pains have been taken by the government to improve the road & saddle horses, by crossings with English breeds. English sheep have been imported lately to improve the native races; but their number is inconsiderable. Pigs are reared in great numbers in the forest regions, & the rearing of the silkworm was estab. in 1826. Mining is one of the chief sources of wealth; in 1847 there were in the country 352 mines, occupying, or extend. under, more than 640 sq. ms.; the principal products are iron, coal, copper, zinc, marble, slate, & stone. Iron is abundant in the countries betw. the Sambre & Meuse; but Limburg & Luxemburg also furnish a considerable quantity. In the province of Liege the average ann. produce of iron is 150,000 tons. Mons, Charleroi, & Liege, are the great centres of the coal trade; & in 1845, it is estimated that 4,960,077 tons of coal were raised in Belgium, being about 1-4th more than was raised in France during the same year. Copper & lead are deficient, but the mines of Moresnet (Liege) furnish more than half the zinc used in Europe. Fishing in the open sea & on the coasts occupies about 200 boats, in the ports of Antwery, Ostend, Blankenberghe, & Nieuport. Ostend is the princip. port for the herring fishery. Manuf. industry is the chief source of prosperity in Belgium; in this it surpasses every country in Europe, except England. According to a recent census, 355,000 persons are employed in Belgium in spinning & weaving, independently of 50,000 more engaged in subsidiary occupations. The manufs. of woollen cloths & cassimeres employ 40,000 hands in & about Verviers; & there are produced annually 100,000 pieces of fine cloth. At Liege, Mechlin, Hodimont, Ypres, &c., flannels, serges, tickings, & coverlets, are made; & carpets are manufd. in nearly all the towns, but especially at Tournay. The linen manuf. is, however, the most ancient & celebrated of the country; & it is estim. that 10,820,000 yards of linen fabrics of various kinds are annually woven in the kingdom. Around Tournay 5,000 stocking-frames are employed: 50,000 persons are emp'd in cotton manufs., of which Ghent, St. Nicholas, Antwerp, Turnhout, Mechlin, & Lierre, are the chief seats. Silk fabrics; lace at Brussels, Mechlin, &c.; embroidery, ribands, hosiery, hats, leather, paper, oil-cloth, hair, & caoutchouc articles, are also very important manufs.; & cabinet-making, printing, lithography, & book-binding, are well conducted in Belgium. 69 smelting furnaces & 175 iron forges are in active operation, the principal being at Liege, where the royal cannon foundry is one of the best estabs. of the kind in Europe. Steam engines are built at Liege, Brussels, Charleroi, Tirlemont, & Bruges; nail-making employs from 12,000 to 13,000 hands; firearms are made at Liege, & exported to Brazil, Germ., Italy, Spain, & the East; & cutlery (superior to that of France & Germany) is manufd. in Namur, Brussels, & Ghent. Next to these, the most important manufs. are leather, paper, glass, & porcelain, beet-root sugar, salt, chemical goods, bronze wares, scientific & musical instruments, hardwares; & jewellery at Liege & Antwerp. Typography, the chf. seat of which is Brussels, is carried to great perfection. It is chiefly supported by the re-production of French works, which are printed ann. to the value of 10,000,000 fr. Belgium is the only country in Europe which possesses a complete system of railroads. Length, 1850, 326 m. (See Appendix.) The whole territory is intersected by canals, many of which admit merchant vessels, & the gt. roads are among the finest in Europe. In 1851 the imports into Belgium amounted in value to 241,059,000 fr. They comprised coffee, cotton, wool, hides, salt, raw sugar, tobacco, woollen & silk stuffs, wines, timber, cattle, indigo, resins, & metals. Exports in same year, to the value of 253,828,000 fr., consisted in hempen & linen cloths, glass wares, refined sugar, corn, cattle, skins, woollen fabrics, iron & nails, oil, seeds, flax, & machinery. A considerable amount of the foreign merchandize imported passes through the country into Germany, &c. Antwerp, Ostend, & Nieuport, are the chief ports.

Govt. is a constitutional monarchy. The sovereignty is hered., except in failure of heirs male; the senate & the house of representatives are both elected by the people. Punishment of death has been abolished; universal toleration, freedom of the press, & trial by jury are estab. The pop. is almost entirely Roman Catholic; but the clergy of all sects are supported by the State. Each prov. has its governor, a council of from 50 to 70 mem., & a court of assize; & in most of the large manuf. towns is now a council des prudhommes. Each arrond. has a court of primary jurisdistion, & each canton a police tribunal. Courts of appeal are established in Brussels, Ghent, & Liege; & the whole are subordinate to a court of cassation in Brussels. The kdgm. has 4 universities, the seats of which are Ghent, Liege, Louvain, & Brussels; in most of the cities are diocesan seminaries; in many high schools, termed gymnasia; & Belgium is remarkable for her public libraries, 14 in number. The compulsory system of education in force under the Dutch rule was abolished by the Belgians in 1830, & the amount of public instruction is much less than previously; but in each commune is a primary school, & the average number receiving instruction in 1836 was as 1 to 10 of the pop. Each commune has its bureau of charity for the permanent relief of the poor; & numerous hospitals & asylums are estab. in the principal cities & towns. Belgium has 22 fortified places; the armed force in 1853 amounted to 100,000 men, beside the burgher guard, which amounts to 90,000 men. Public rev. 1852, 117,310,250 fr.; pub. expenditure, 121,210,195 fr.; pub. debt, 630,000,000 fr. Belgium successively formed part of the doms. of Austria & Spain from the 15th century until 1795, when it was conquered by the French. It remained annexed to Holland from 1815 to 1830, in the autumn of which year it acquired its independence, after a revolution of a very few days.

It is the largest & best built city of Servia, & one of the strongest places in Europe, being garrisoned by 6,000 Turks. The citadel, occupied by the Turkish pasha & troops, is on the tongue of land betw. the rivs., behind which rises the city proper, with antique-looking German edifices, a new cathedral, a palace, & barracks. The Turkish quarter, with the old palace of Prince Eugene, slopes down to the Danube; the Servian quarter, with the custom-house & consular residence, borders on the Save, which is lined by a good quay, & rows of mod. houses. Belgrade had formerly quite an oriental appearance, but it is becoming abandoned by wealthy Turks; churches are superseding mosques; new buildings are being constructed in the German fashion; & bazaars have now glazed shop-windows. The streets, however, remain filthy, ill-paved, & not lighted, & the public baths & inns are wretched. It has manufs. of arms, carpets, silk goods, cutlery, & saddlery; with a tolerable port, an increasing general trade, a new lyceum, & sev. schools; it is the entrepôt of commerce betw. Turkey & Austria, & the seat of the principal authorities of Servia. It was taken by the Turks, under Solyman II., in 1522; & re-taken by Prince Eugene in 1717. It was partly ruined during the Servian insurrection in 1813, & its repair was commenced by the Porte in 1836.—II. a town of European Turkey, Rumili, 13 m. N. BELLOWS' FALLS, p-v., Rockingham t., Windham co., Vt., 98 S. by E. Montpelier, 445 W. The v. is pleasantly situated at the junction of the Vermont Val. r. r., with the Sullivan r. r. 224 ms. from New York, & contains an Episcopal church, a bank, & 550 inhabitants. The falls in the Connecticut here, are a curiosity. In the midst of the channel worn in the rocks, a huge rock remains, on each side of which is a passage for the water. As the E. side, however, is more elevated than the W. side, the water, excepting when the river is high, passes wholly on the W. side. The river above, which is about 350 feet wide, is here compressed into a channel 16 feet wide, & descends by successive pitches, 44 feet in the course of half a mile. A canal has been cut in the rock, around these falls, three quarters of a mile long, with 9 locks on the W. side, through which boats & small steamboats pass. A bridge passes over the river here, supported in the middle by the rock, built in 1785, 365 feet long, the view from which is wildly picturesque.

BELOOCHISTAN, (Gedrosia, & the countries of the Oreitæ, Ichthyophagi, &c.), an extens. country of S. Asia, forming the S.E. part of the old dom. of Persia, betw. lat. 24° 50′ & 30° 20′ N., & lon. 57° 40′ & 69° 18′ E.; having E. Scinde, N. Afghanistan, N.W. & W. the Persian desert; & extending on the S. for 600 m. along the shores of the Indian Ocean. Estim. area, 160,000 sq. m., & pop. 480,000. It is subdiv. into the 6 provs. of Kelat, Sarawan, Cutch-Gundava, Jhalawan, Lus, & Mekran. Nearly the whole country is mntnous., except in the N.W. & along the coast, its general characteristics being a rugged & elev. surface, barrenness, & deficiency of water. Its mntns. in the E. are connected with those of S. Afghanistan, & rise to consid. elev.; the Bolan Pass, & even the bottom of some valleys are upwards of 5,700 ft. in height, & the cap. Kelat is 6,000 ft. above the sea. In the N. the peak of Takkatoo is considered to have an elev. of 11,000 ft. The rivs. are very insignificant, except after heavy rains; the largest, the Dustee, though supposed to have a course of 1,000 m., has been found at its mouth only 20 inches deep, & 20 yds. in width. The climate is exceedingly varied, being cold in the elevated parts, & excessively hot in the lower valleys. In the low & watered plains of Cutch-Gundava & Lus, rice & sugar-cane, with cotton, indigo, & tobacco are raised; in other parts, wheat, barley, madder, & pulses, with European fruits, melons, pomegranates, rhubarb, assafœtida are the principal products; on some of the mntn. sides, the tamarask & babool attain the size of large timber trees. In the wide sandy desert of Mekran, where the returning army of Alexander the Great suffered its severest hardships, the date is the only valuable product. Pastures are generally poor, & cattle few; but a good many sheep & goats are kept, the pursuits of the people being mostly pastoral. The Bactrian (or two-humped) camel, & the dromedary, are used as beasts of burden; in the N.W. some good horses are bred. The strata about Kelat & Moostung, as well as other explored localities, consist of secondary limestone, sandstone, & conglomerates; & the N.W. extremity shows indications of volcanic action. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, antimony, iron, sulphur, alum, & sal-ammoniac, but these are turned to little account. Prepared skins, woollen felt, & cloths, carpets, & tent-covers of goats' or camels' hair, & rude fire-arms, are all the manufd. products. Trade comparatively small, & almost monopolized by Hindoos. Sonmeanee is the only seaport. Principal exports, butter or ghee, hides, wool, a few drugs, dried fruits, fish, a little corn, & vegetable oil; imports, British & India manufs., rice, spices, dye-stuffs, & slaves for Muscat. The pop. consists mainly of Belooches & Brahooes, two races very different in personal appearance, but both Mohammedans of the Soonnee sect, & who, like the Afghans, are subdivided into numerous tribes or clans, each under its own chief. Mekran is in barbarous anarchy; most of the E. provs. are under the uncertain authority of the khan of Kelat, whose revenue is estimated at 30,000*l.* annually, & his armed force at 3,000 men. Lus is ruled by a vassal of this chieftain. A late khan of Kelat having acted with much treachery toward the British, during their advance into Afghanistan in 1839, his cap. was stormed & taken by the English troops on the 13th of Nov. in that year. In the following year it changed hands, & it was again captured & temporarily held by the British in 1841.

BENGAL, Bangala, a presidency & prov. of British India. It is by far the largest of the three presidencies into which India is divided, comprising, with Agra, about a fourth of the whole area of Hither India, together with the later ceded provinces beyond the Ganges. The territory extends between lat. 20° & 31° N., & lon. 74° & 91° E., bounded on the N. by Nepaul Sikkim & Bootan, on the E. by the dists. adjoining the Burmese dominion, on the S. by Bay of Bengal, the territs. of Berar, Indore, Gwalior, & on the W. by the Rajpoot & Sikh principalities. This great region is divided into the Upper or Western prov., including Delhi, & all that portion W. of lon. 80°; the central, including Allahabad, Bahar, & others, as far E. as lon. 87°; & the lower containing the remaining territory to the S. & E. The following table exhibits the divisions, area, & population:—

Divisions.	Sq. m.	Pop.
Bengal Presidency	325,652	47,958,320
Upper Provs., late Agra Presidency	85,571	23,800,549
Berar	76,432	4,650,000
Provinces conquered from the Burmese under the Bengal Presidency.
Assam, &c. (See East Indies)	78,870	14,657,500
Total	566,525	91,066,369

The greater proportion of this territ. consists of the immense plain or valley of the Ganges. To the N. this plain rises into the mountainous region of Kumaon, & on the S. are the Vindhyan mntns. & the table land of central India. The river Ganges flows in a S.E. direction, through the whole extent of the presidency, & is joined in its course by numerous tributaries, of which the Jumna, Chumbul, Goggra, Gunduck & Sone, are the most considerable. The eastern division of the country is traversed by the Brahmaputra, which discharges its waters into the Bay of Bengal, near the confluence of the Ganges. Both these great rivers divide into numerous branches before reaching the sea, & their united deltas form a tract of rich alluvial soil, exceeding 30,000 sq. m. in extent. There are no inland lakes, but numerous lagoons & marshes, especially in the lower dists. The surface of the country generally exhibits a deep clay alluvium, interspersed with sandy tracts, with tertiary deposits in some localities. Approaching the Himalayan range to the N., are granitic & porphyritic rocks, with secondary limestone & sandstones; N.W. are basaltic & greenstone rocks. The Vindhyan & Garrow chains of mnts. are of volcanic origin. Nitre is found in great quantities in Bahar, as well as common salt, both of which are largely exported. Salt is a government monopoly, & its sale amounts to the value of $900,000 annually. Diamonds are found in a conglomerate in Bundelcund; & gold dust & silver are in some of the rivers. Coal & iron are found in Sylhet & Burdwan. The mean annual temperature of the plains is, for Calcutta & Benares, from 78° to 79° Fahr.; at Delhi, 73° Fahr. During the winter months in Kumaon there is heavy frost & snow. In Bengal the rainy season commences in June, & continues till the middle of October. The annual fall of rain is from 70 to 80 inches. The winter, or cold season, lasts from Nov. to middle of February, when the hot season begins & continues to the middle of June. During the rainy season the lower provs. especially are overflowed by the Ganges & its tributaries. Hence these dists. are highly favorable to the cultivation of rice, which is here the principal product of the soil. In the upper dists. wheat & barley are the principal crops. Indigo is largely cultivated from Dacca to Delhi, there being upwards of 400 Indigo factories in the presidency. Its culture occupies more than a million of acres, & its annual produce is estimated to be worth $12,000,000, half of which amount is yearly expended in its production. Opium is a government monopoly, & is cultivated only in Bahar & Benares, where the produce is considered equal, if not superior, to the opium of Malwah. The quantity of Patna & Benares opium disposed of at the public sales amounts to $10,000,000 annually. Cotton is a staple crop; & the soil in Benares is capable of producing sugar equal to that of the W. Indies. Coffee, pepper, & tobacco are raised, & most of the spice & fruit trees of Asia have been acclimated somewhere in this wide region. The forests contain teak, saul, sissoo, banyan, ebony, oak, & pine timber, with rattans, bamboos, cocoa, areca, & other palms. A great quantity of silk is produced in Bengal-proper, between lat. 22° & 26°, & lon. 86° & 90°. Elephants' teeth, & hides of various kinds, form important articles of trade. Nitre is obtained principally in Bahar prov., & exported from Calcutta annually to the value of $1,500,000. Muslins, cotton piece goods, diaper, pack-thread, sailcloth, chintzes, silks, calicoes, blanketing, & other woven goods, are staple manufs.; but, of late years, they have begun to be superseded by fabrics from Europe. For expts. & impts. see Calcutta. The gov. is vested in the Governor-General of India & a council composed of six members, & a provisional one. The upper provs. are under a lieut.-gov. at Agra, subordinate to the gov.-general at Calcutta. In each district or collectorate is a judge, empowered to decide appeals originating in the district, & to try civil suits to the amount of 2,000*l*. Superior to these tribunals are courts of appeal in Calcutta, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Patna, Benares, & Bareily; & a supreme court sits in Calcutta, from which there is appeal only to the British sovereign in council. In the upper provs. the land rev. is collected for the government by officers appointed under the native village system of India; in the lower provs. the zemindars, or hereditary tax-collectors, constituted proprietors of the soil by Lord Cornwallis' Act, account to the gov. for 9-10ths of the sums they collect as rent, & reserve the remaining 1-10th for their own remuneration. [INDIA.] Numerous schools for the natives have been established by government throughout the presidency, & colleges at Calcutta, Delhi, Agra, Benares, besides several missionary stations & schools for the religious instruction of the natives. The pop. of this presid. embraces a great variety of races,—Hindoos of all castes, Moguls, Mahrattas, Sikhs, Rajpoots, peculiar wild tribes in Gundwanah & Bhaugulpore; & beyond the Brahmaputra, Mughs, Garrows, & other races differing widely from those of W. Asia. The prevailing religions are the Brahminical & Mohammedan; Buddhism is confined to the countries E. of the Brahmaputra; & the hill tribes have rude paganisms of their own. The Protestant estab. consists of an archdeacon & about 40 chaplains, subordinate to the bp. of Calcutta; there is also a small estab. for the Scotch kirk. The Roman Catholic estab. is under the vic. apostolic of Agra, & a legate at Calcutta, both subordinate to the R. Catholic bp. at Madras. Public rev. is derived from the land-tax, & subsidies from protected native states; mint, post-office, stamp, & excise duties; a house-tax in Calcutta, judicial fees & fines, sayer & abkarry duties, customs, pilotage, monopoly of salt & opium, &c., which amounts to over $40,000,000 annually. Principal cities, Calcutta, the cap. of British India; Delhi, the Mohammedan cap.; Benares, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Bahhar, Patna, Allahabad, Agra. Calcutta was erected into a presid. separate from Madras in 1707; in 1765, the English acquired by treaty the sovereignty over the provs. Bengal, Bahar, & a part of Orissa; & in 1773, the residence of the governor-general of India was fixed in Bengal. The principal accessions of territory since have been Benares, in 1775; Oude dists., 1801; Delhi territ., 1805; Kumaon, 1815; S.W. (Nerbudda) dists., 1818; Singapore & Malacca, 1824; Burmese ceded provs. in 1826; & Berar in 1853.—Bengal Province, one of the largest & most important of the old Mohammedan provs. of Hindostan, between lat. 21° & 27° N., & lon. 87° & 92° E. It comprises the delta of the Ganges, with the lower course of the Brahmaputra, & is traversed by numerous other rivs., its surface being mostly a dead level. It is wholly included in the British dom., & forms under the above presidency the divisions of its three principal cities, Calcutta, Moorshedabad, & Dacca, which are subdivided into numerous subordinate districts. (See East Indies.)

BENGAL (BAY OF), Gangeticus Sinus, a part of the Indian Ocean, extending between Hither & Further India, including the sea from Cape Negrais on the E., to the delta of the Godavery on the W., between lat. 16° 30′ & 23° N. Its chief affls. are the Ganges, including the Brahmaputra & the Godavery. The sea of Bengal, which is sometimes described as part of the bay, extends to lat. 6° N., between the islands of Ceylon & Junkseylon. Depth 4 to 60 faths., from the delta to a distance of 100 m.; 30 m. from the coast, a circular space 15 m. in diameter, has no soundings at 100 or 130 fathoms.

BENGAZI, Berenice, a maritime town of N. Africa, Barca, on the Gulf of Sidra (anc. Syrtis Major), 420 m. E.S.E. Tripoli. Lat. 32° 6′ 8″ N., lon. 20° 2′ 7″ E. Pop. about 2,500. It is finely situated in a fertile plain, but is miserably built, & filthy; & its port is shallow. It has a castle, the residence of a bey; & some trade with Barbary & Malta, in wool, oxen, sheep, salted butter, & corn. Near this city were the "gardens of the Hesperides," & traces of anc. buildings are often met with buried in the sand.

BENGUELA, a marit. country of W. Africa, nominally claimed by Portugal, between lat. 9° & 16° S., & lon. 12° & 17° (?) E., having N. Angola, from which it is sep. by the riv. Coanza; & W. the S. Atlantic. Est. pop. of Benguela, including Angola, 400,000. Surface mntnous., & rises progressively inland by a series of terraces. Principal rivers have all a W. course. The climate is very unhealthy, & fever is prevalent. The therm. varies from 94° to 105° Fahr. in the shade at noon. The soil is well watered, & very productive; little corn is raised, but tropical fruits, European vegetables, & cattle, are abundant, & numerous fine turtles are obtained on the sea coast. Mineral products comprise copper, sulphur, petroleum, & gold. Among the natives here, are the Giagas, a race of fierce savages, whose incursions are much dreaded by the Portuguese. Fêticism is the prevailing superstition. Beasts of prey, including the lion & hyena, are numerous. The government of the prov. is under the immediate control of the gov.-general of Loando. New Benguela, Novo Redondo, &c., on the coast, & a few stations in the interior, are occupied by the Portuguese, whose rule, however, extends little, if at all, beyond those settlements.

BENGUELA (NEW, or ST. PHILIP DE), a seaport town, & the Portuguese cap. of above country, with a noble harbor on the Atlantic, near the riv. Catumbella. Lat. 12° 33′ 9″ S., lon. 13° 25′ 2″ E. Pop. 3,000, of whom one-third are whites & mulattoes. Its principal inhabs. are slave dealers, & their iniquitous trade is so flourishing, that, in 1838, nearly 20,000 slaves were exported. Morality is at the lowest ebb, & there is no school of instruc. in the town, which is sit. in a charming & very fertile valley. The streets are straight & wide, but contain more ruined than inhabited houses; they are mostly built of clay & palm branches. The ruins of Old Benguela, the original cap. of the country, are situated on the coast, 130 m. N.N.E. New Benguela.

BERLIN, an important city of Germany, cap. of the Prussian monarchy, & of the prov. Brandenburg, on the Spree, 156 m. E.S.E. Hamburg, & 100 m. N. Dresden. Lat. (of new Observatory) 52° 30′ 16″ N., lon. 13° 23′ 58″ E.; mean temp. of the year 48° .2; summer 64° .5; winter 31° .4 Fahr. Pop. 1846, 408,502, & in May 1852, 441,931. It is built in a sandy plain elevated 127 feet above the level of the sea, & on both banks of the Spree, is about 10 m. in circumference, occupies an extent of 6,800 acres, & is one of the finest & most handsomely constructed cities in Europe. The chief divisions of the city are, 1. Berlin Proper, 2. Cologne (alt and neu Köln), on the Spree; 3. Louisenstadt, in the S.; 4. Friedrichstadt, in S.W.; 5. Friedrichswerder, betw. alt & neu Köln & Freidrichstadt; 6. Neustadt, or Dorotheenstadt, betw. Friedrichstadt & the Spree; 7. Friedrich Wilhelmstadt, built 1828, & the suburbs of Stralhau, Spandau, & Königstadt, Oranienburg, & Potsdam. The city is surrounded by a wall 16 feet high, & is entered by 16 gates, one of which, the Brandenburg gate on its W., is a colossal structure, surmounted by a victory, in a car drawn by 4 horses, & one of the most elegant of the kind in Europe. It was carried to Paris in 1807, & restored in 1814. Of the 40 bridges which cross the Spree & its branches, the principal are the long bridge, with an equest. statue of the great elector Frederick William; the Schlossbrücke, or palace bridge, with groups of heroes in marble; Frederick's bridge, consisting of eight arches, & constructed of iron. The city generally is regular & handsome, but the houses are of little elevation. The finest streets are in Fried. & Dorotheen stadt; the most celeb. is that called 'Unter-der-Linden,' a broad & imposing street, planted with 4 rows of lime trees, ornamented by an equest. statue of Fred. the Great, terminat. by the Brandenburg gate at the one end, & the royal palace at the other. Other streets most worthy of notice are Friedrich st., Wilhelm st., Paris square, Wilhelms place, Belle Alliance place, & the Gens-d'Armes market. Around the principal squares & streets are grouped numerous public buildings, among which are the royal castle & palace, the arsenal, university, museums, exchange, opera-house, theatres, & the palaces of the princes. There are 33 churches, of which 23 are evangelical, 4 French Calvinist, 2 Rom. Catholic, & 1 chapel of the Bohemian brothers. The cathed. in the Lustgarten is the finest, but none of them are remarkable for their architecture. The Prussian capital has nums. & excellent hôtels & cafés, & its public conveyances are under the best management. In summer upwards of 1,000 droskeys are kept in the streets for hire. The suburbs have many attractions, among which are the Thier-garten, a large open park outside of the Brandenburg gate, in which a 'corso' has been recently estab., & the Kreutzberg, a sandhill, S. of the gate of Halle, on which is erected an iron monument to the memory of the Prussians who fell in the wars of Napoleon, & whence the only good view of the city is obtained. Berlin is the great centre of instruction & intellectual development in Northern Germany; its educational estabs. are numerous & celebrated. The university, founded in 1809, & comprising schools of jurisprudence, medicine, & philosophy, had in 1843–4, 1,656 students. There are 6 gymnasia, 2 Protestant theol. seminaries, a milit. school, schools of artillery, military engineering, architecture, sculpture, painting, & music; a preparatory school of music, & many elementary schools. It has extens. public libraries, among which the royal library, founded in 1650, has 600,000 printed vols. & 500 MSS. Among its valuable collections are royal museums of painting, sculpture, antiquities, coins, & medals, a museum of nat. hist., a royal astronom. & magnet. observatory, & a royal botanic garden, one of the richest & most complete in Europe. Its justly celeb. academic institutions comprise the acad. of sciences (Akademie der Wissenschaften), acad. of the fine arts, acad. for the encouragement of industry, & the acad. of music; a geographical society, founded in 1828, & a society of natural history. It has 2 royal theatres; & its celeb. opera house, burned in 1843, was rebuilt in 1844. Among its charitable institutions are the Hôtel des Invalides, for 300 soldiers & 12 officers, & an orphan hospital. Berlin is the first city in Germany for the variety & importance of its manuf. products. The different articles of indust. are cloths, linens, carpets, silks, ribands, & printed cottons, iron wares, especially the beautiful cast-iron articles called "Berlin jewellery," paper, porcelain, mathem. & optical instruments, chem. & dye-stuffs, includg. the celeb. "Prussian blue," & musical instruments. Among its great industrial estabs. are the royal iron foundry & royal porcelain manufactory. The productions of the press in typography, cartography, & lithography, are numerous & excellent. For the encouragement of commerce there is a royal bank, a royal mercantile marine (Seehandlungs-institute), established in 1772, & steam-packet companies. All the great roads in the kingdom meet in Berlin; its position, on a navig. river, communicating by canals with the Elbe, Oder, & Vistula, renders its navigation of considerable importance; & it is the centre of a system of railroads which connect it with the Baltic by Hamburg & Kiel, on the N.W., Wismar & Rostock on the N., & by Stettin on the N. E. On the S.E. a line extends by Breslau through Vienna, to Trieste, on the Adriatic, S. to Leipzig & Dresden & Vienna, & on the W. to Bremen, to the ports of Belgium, & to Paris, &c. The origin of the city dates from the 13th cent., but it first became important in the reign of the great elector Fred. William, in 1650. In 1700, its pop. amounted to only 29,000. Berlin was occup. by the Austrians & Russians in 1760, & by the French in 1806.

Pop. 22,496, mostly employed in ship-building, in extensive tanneries, & in a large retail trade. Bermondsey has two chapels for its large Roman Catholic population, a convent, many schools & other charities, & some small remains of a celebrated abbey, founded about A.D. 1082.

BERMUDA, THE BERMUDAS, or SOMERS ISLS., a group of about 300 small isls. belonging to Great Britain, in the Atlantic, lat. 32° 20′ N., & lon. 64° 50′ W., 600 m. E. from South Carolina. Area, about 20 sq. m., or from 12,000 to 13,000 ac. Pop. 1851, 11,092. Surface mostly low, & composed of a shelly coralline rock. Many rocky reefs surround the Bermudas, which are visited by severe gales in winter; but among the isls. are several good anchorages. Climate mild & salubrious. Mean ann. temp., 71° to 75° Fahr. Principal exports, arrow-root, cocoa, potatoes, onions, palmetto, & straw hats. The fruits of both tropical & temperate regions are raised; poultry & veal are plentiful. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the transit & other trade between Newfoundland and the West Indies; & others in the whale fishery. St. George's & Ireland isls. are strongly fortified; on the former is Hamilton, the cap., & the latter is entirely occupied by its fortress, arsenal, & dockyards. It is the great convict station. Legislature, composed of the governor, a legislative council of not less than 7 or more than 12 members, & a House of Assembly of 36 members. (Salary of the gov. & com.-in-chief, £2,746. Residence, Hamilton.) The principal islands are St. George, Ireland, St. David, Somerset, Paget, Longbend, & Smith's. This group of isls. was discovered in 1522 by Bermudez, a Spaniard; Sir. G. Somers was wrecked here in 1609, & soon after this they were colonized from Virginia & England. There is regular steam communication between Bermuda & New York, & Bermuda & St. Thomas.

BERMUDIAN, p-v., Adams co., Pa., 19 S. by W. Harrisburg, 96 W.

BERN, or BERNE (CANTON), a state of central Europe, one of the three Vorort, or governing cantons of the Swiss confederation, situated between lat. 46° 20′ & 47° 30′ N., & lon. 6° 50′ & 8° 27′ E. Bounded N. by France, E. by the cants. Soleure, Aargau, Lucern, Unterwalden, & Uri, S. by the Valais, & W. by Vaud, Fribourg, Neuchatel. Area, 2,584 square miles. Pop. 1850, 457,921, of whom (403,969) are Protestants. The country is very mountainous, comprising, in the S., many of the highest points of the Alps, as the Finster-aar-Horn, Jungfrau, Schreckhorn, & Mönch, the terraces & contre-forts of which form the Bernese Oberland, celebrated for the beauty of its valleys, the chief of which are the Simmenthal, Lauterbrunnen, Grindelwald, & Hasli. The N. part of the cant. is covered by the Jura mountains, the two regions being separated by the valley of the Aar. Nearly the whole territory belongs to the basin of the Rhine, & is drained by the Aar & its tributaries, the chief of which are the Emmen, Simmen, Kander, and Thiele. The lakes of Neuchatel & Bienne are formed by the Thiele, & those of Thun & Brienz by the Aar. Climate healthy; excessively cold in the region of the Alps, where the perpetual snow forms the most extens. glaciers in Switzerland, but mild at the foot of the Jura, and in the valley of Interlacken. The mntns. are covered with extensive forests of pine & beech, & the soil is fertile in the valleys. The amount of grain, potatoes, hemp, & lint, is insufficient for consumption. The vine is cultivated to a considerable extent in the valleys of the Thiele, and on the lakes Neuchatel, Bienne, & Thun. Pasturage extensive, and the rearing of cattle is the chief source of wealth; those of the valleys of the Emmen & Sarine being considered the best in Switzerland, & the celebrated cheese there produced is one of the chief articles of commerce in the canton. The horses of the Emmenthal are much esteemed. The canton has mines of iron, lead, and copper, marble & gypsum quarries, fine freestone, granite, & lime. Iron is worked extensively in the Jura. Among the many mineral springs, those of Weissenburg, Blumenstein, Frutigen, and Gurnigel, are most frequented. The chief objects of industry are the manufs. of linens & woollens, iron and copper wares, watchmaking, & the wooden wares of the Oberland. The chief imports are salt, colonial prod., grain, tobacco, & metals. The cant. is traversed by excellent roads, & steam packets ply on the lakes, and on the river Aar. The educational establishments of the canton are numerous & excellent, comprising a university, polytechnic and normal schools, and the celeb. agricultural & industrial institution at Hofwyl. Bern is the largest canton of the Swiss confed., & holds the second rank in the federal diet. Its contingent to the army is 5,824 men.

BERN, a town of Switzerl., cap. cant. of same name, on a small peninsula formed by the Aar, here crossed by two stone bridges, one of which, opened 1844, is 900 feet in length, 80 m. N.E. Geneva, & 23 m. S. Basel. Elev. (of observ.) 1,856 feet. Pop. 23,000. Bern is the seat of the federal diet, alternately with Zurich & Lucern, & residence of three foreign ministers. It is the finest town in Switzerland, & one of the most handsome in Europe; it is entirely built of freestone, & is remarkable for the arcades formed by the houses in all its principal streets, & for its numerous fountains, many of which are ornamented with curious sculpture. It has a Gothic cathedral, a university founded 1834, a theological college, a military academy, an observatory, a public library, with an extensive collection of books & MSS. on Swiss history; a museum of natural history, an arsenal, a mint, in which the coins of several cants. are struck, & many charitable institutions. Its chief industry consists in the manufacture of gunpowder, fire-arms, & mathematical instruments, straw hats, paper, & leather. Bern was surrounded by walls in 1191, declared a free city in 1218, & admitted into the Swiss confederation in 1352; its fortifications were demolished in 1835. It is the birth-place of Haller. Bears have for many centuries been maintained here at the public expense, & the effigy of bruin is a favorite emblem on the coins & fountains of the canton.

BERNADOTTE, p-v., Fulton co., Ill., 65 N.W. Springfield, 843 W. Pop. of t., 787.

BERNALILLO, co., N. Mexico. Situated S. of Santa Fe. Area about 3,000 sq. m. The Rio Grand passes almost centrally through it, & the Puerco river passes through the E. part. Surface mountainous, with fertile valleys. The soil is sandy, & apparently not fertile; but, by irrigation, produces abundant crops often twice a year. "How quick the sandy, apparently sterile soil, in the valley of the Rio del Norte, is, by irrigation, changed into the most fertile, is astonishing; the granitic character of the surrounding mountains, whose decomposed parts are carried into the valley, & form a part of the soil, must have a great influence upon it." Capital, Albuquerque. There were in 1850, live stock valued at $312,282; wheat, 17,701 bush. produced; Ind. corn, 39,303; peas & beans, 2,300; wool, 8,500 pounds;—10 churches. Pop. 1850, 7,751.

BERNARD (GREAT ST.), Mont Jovis, a remarkable mountain pass in the chain of the Alps, between Piedmont & the Valais. It owes its modern name to the great celebrity of the hospice, said to have been founded by Bernard de Menthon, in 862, for the succor of travellers, who have been assisted to the number of 600 in one day. The hospice, a strong stone building, is situated on the summit of the pass, 11 miles N.N.W. Aosta, & 17 m. S.S.E. Martigny, at an elevation of 8,150 feet above the level of the sea. It is the highest habitation in the Alps, & the cold is so intense that a small lake in its vicinity is frozen over 9 months in the year. During the whole year, the philanthropic inmates, monks of the order of St. Augustine, with their valuable dogs, hold themselves in readiness to assist travellers arrested by the snow, which in winter accumulates to a depth of from 10 to 40 feet. In the chapel is a monument to General Desaix, erected by Napoleon in 1805. This gorge, which was traversed by Roman armies, by Charlemagne, and by Frederic Barbarossa, is celebrated for the passage of Bonaparte at the head of the French army of 30,000 men, with cavalry & artillery, 15th to 21st May, 1800. The road has been recently much improved. Little St. Bernard, is a mntn. of the Graian Alps, S. of Mont Blanc, elev. of convent, 7,076 feet.

BETHLEHEM (Beit-el-Lehm, the "house of bread"), a famous city of Palestine, which, though insignificant in point of size, will be ever memorable as the birthplace of the Founder of Christianity. It stands on the mntn. chain of Anti-Libanus, 5½ m. S.W. Jerusalem. Pop. said to be 3,000, nearly all Christians,—a bold & hardy race, who have successfully resisted Turkish oppression. It is a large straggling vill., with one broad street, at the extremity of which there is a magnificent church, erected in the 4th century by the Empress Helena, over the site (the "Grotto of the Nativity," traditionally celebrated for the birth of the Saviour, & attached to which are large convents, belonging to Roman Catholics, Greeks, & Armenians. All around are a multitude of chapels, erected as memorials of events commemorated in sacred history; & numerous reservoirs & springs, to which sacred traditions are attached. On the W. side of the town are the remains of the ancient aqueduct which conveyed water to Jerusalem from several pools near Bethlehem. The country around is extremely fruitful, to which circumstance, doubtless, the town originally owed its name.

BIRMINGHAM, a parl. & municipal bor., one of the principal manufacturing towns of England, near its centre, co. & 17 m. N.W. Warwick, 100 m. N.W. London, & 784 m. S.E. Liverpool. Area of borough, which includes the adjacent townships, Aston, Edgbaston, &c., 2,660 acres. Pop. in 1690, 4,000; in 1801, 60,822; in 1841, 182,922; 1851, 232,841. The town, on the river Rea, occupies the E. declivity of three undulating hills, & from the S.E. presents to view a mass of red brick houses, interspersed with several lofty church spires, & a vast number of tall chimneys belonging to its factories. Its lower part consists of unprepossessing streets, old houses, & workshops; but its upper portions comprise many broad streets & good residences. In its centre is a handsome quarter, rivalling in appearance the best parts of the metropolis, & containing the town-hall, Edward VI.'s grammar school, St. Phillip's & St. George's churches, Queen's college, theatre, & other principal edifices. The uneven ground on which Birmingham is built, facilitates its drainage, & thus contributes to its salubrity. It is also well lighted with gas, & paved, though many parts of the town are ill furnished with foot-paths. The superb town-hall, one of the finest edifices in England, occupies a commanding site, & is in classic style; it is fronted with marble, & has a saloon 145 feet in length, 65 feet in breadth, & the same in height; it can accommodate 8,000 persons (or 4,000 seated), & contains a fine organ, some pipes in which are said to be the largest in Europe: in this hall the triennial musical festivals are held. The theatre, erected in 1821, at a cost of 14,000*l.* & having a front in the Ionic order, is a handsome building, & one of the most commodious of its class out of the metropolis. The free grammar school, founded in 1552, is a richly decorated Gothic edifice, (174 feet by 125 feet,) rebuilt in 1834 by Mr. Barry, at a cost of nearly 50,000*l.*; it has a revenue, now probably amounting to 11,000*l.* a-year, & 10 exhibitions of 50*l.* per annum for four years, to any college at Oxford or Cambridge. In 1847 the different classes were attended by 1,200 pupils. Queen's college, lately established, & munificently endowed by private benefactions, is in connection with the University of London, & regulated on the old collegiate system; attached to it are a flourishing medical school & Queen's hospital, also recently founded. Birmingham originally consisted of but one parish: it is now divided into four—St. Martin, St. Phillip, St. George, & St. Thomas. St. Martin's church, in the Bull-ring, lower part of the town, was built in the 8th century. It was originally of stone, & is now encased in brick. There are several other chapels belonging to the establishment. These parishes were formerly within the archbishopric of Lichfield & Coventry, but were transferred by the church commissioners to the diocese of Worcester. There are 92 churches,—10 Baptist, 1 Brethren, 2 Catholic Apostolical, 25 Episcopal, 2 Friends', 12 Independent, 1 Jews' synagogue, 24 Methodist, 1 Mormon, 1 New Church, 1 Presbyterian, 4 Roman Catholic, 5 Unitarian, & 3 isolated congregations. Other principal buildings are—a large general hospital, general dispensary, athenæum, large mkt.-house, Roman Catholic cathedral, a vast brick edifice; the barracks, & railroad station, which last is a general point of junction of railroads from London, Liverpool, Derby, Worcester, &c. Public institutions comprise a society of arts, with a drawing academy, & annual exhibition of paintings; public library, with 27,000 vols.; philosophic & mechanics' institutions, a blue-coat school: Springhill college, for Independents & Baptists; national & proprietary schools, & a great variety of other educational establishments; deaf & dumb, & magdalen asylums: eye & ear, & lying-in infirmaries; a botanic garden, horticultural & statistical societies, & a public cemetery company. The town has extensive baths, & a place of amusement termed "Vauxhall." Birmingham has made most rapid progress in manufacturing industry within the present century. Its manufactures comprise almost every description of iron & steel goods, brass & iron founding, saddlery, fire-arms, cutlery, gold, silver, plated, bronze, ormolu, & japanned wares; papier mâché goods, toys, jewellery, electro-plated goods, buttons, steel-pens, glass, tools, steam-engines, & all kinds of machinery.

In 1849, the steam-engines employed in its factories, were supposed to have an aggregate power of 5,400 horses, & to consume 377 tons of coal daily, & the annual value of manufactures has been estimated at $20,000,000. Among the most interesting manufacturing establishments, is the steam-engine factory at Soho, the largest in the world, & with which the name of the celebrated Watt is associated. Wages are higher in Birmingham than in most of the manufacturing towns of the North of England; & the condition of its artisans is in favorable contrast to that exhibited at many other places, both as to health & prosperity. It is computed that 20,000 families are employed in trade, manufactures, & handicraft; & a few years ago, upwards of 40,000 of its inhabitants were members of friendly societies. The immense coal & iron beds of the district by which Birmingham is surrounded, may be viewed as the main source of its manufacturing prosperity, which has also been greatly aided by canals, communicating with the Thames, Severn, Mersey, Trent, & Humber, & more recently by railroads, which bring the metropolis, & all the great towns of the N. of England, within a few hours' journey. The London & Birmingham r. r. was commenced in 1834, & completed in 1838, at an expense of 5¼ millions sterling; & by means of the Grand Junction r. r., Birmingham has communication with Warrington, Stafford, Manchester, & Liverpool. Mkts. Mond., Thursd., & Sat. Fairs, Thursd., Frid., & Sat. of Whitsun. week, & on the three same days nearest to 29th Sept. By its charter of incorporation, dated 1838, Birmingham is divided into 16 wards, & governed by a mayor & recorder, 16 aldermen, & 48 common councilmen. It has a bor. court of quarter sessions, & a town court of requests. Since the Reform Act it has sent two mems. to H. of C. This town is supposed to have been a place where arms were manufd. in the time of the anc. Britons; its high commerc. importance dates, however, only from the 17th century. In 1791, a disgraceful riot took place here, in which the library of Dr. Priestley was burnt by the mob, & in 1839, the Bull-ring was the scene of a Chartist outbreak.—Near it are Hagley, the seat of Lord Lyttleton; Enville, the seat of the Earl of Stamford; & numerous elegant villas, the residences of wealthy manufacturers.

BLACK, or EUXINE SEA, Pontus Euxinus, a great inland sea between Europe & Asia, within the parallels of lat 40° 45′ & 46° 45′ N., & extending from lon. 27° 30′ to 41° 50′ E.; extreme length 700 m.; greatest breadth 380 m. It is surrounded by the countries of Russia, Armenia, & Asiatic & European Turkey, & communicates by the strait of Yenikale with the sea of Azov on the N.E., & by the Bosporus, with the Sea of Marmara in the S.W. The shores of the Euxine are bold & high on the N.E., E., & S.W., but flat on the N. & N.W.; its depth varies from 4 to 48 fathoms near its shores, but in the middle no soundings have been obtained at 160 fathoms. The water contains 1–7th less salt than the ocean, & is so fresh that it freezes very easily. It has numerous small ports; but the only gulf of importance is that of Kerkinit, between the Crimea & the continent of Russia. There are several islands near the mouth of the Danube, but few rocks or shoals—the largest of these, Serpent island, is furnished with a lighthouse. The chief affluents of the Euxine are the Danube, Dniester, Bug, Dnieper, the Don (by the sea of Azov & the strait of Yenikale), & the Kuban in Europe; & the Kizil-Irmak & Sakara in Asia. It is calculated that the Black Sea receives one-third of the running waters of Europe. The Black Sea has no tide; it is liable to frequent storms, such as are generally met with in great lakes & enclosed seas; but its navigation is so far from being very dangerous, as formerly represented, that probably no sea of equal extent is more safe. It is traversed regularly by steam-packets between Constantinople & the mouths of the Danube, & between the principal ports of Russia.

BOGOTA (formerly SANTA FE DE BOGOTA), a city of S. Amer., cap. of the repub. of New Grenada, on a plateau 8,958 ft. above the sea, in lat. 4° 36′ 6″ N., lon. 74° 10′ W. Pop. 45,000. It is built at the bases of 2 montns. Guadelupe and Montserrat, and extends to the plain of Funza, & is on the left bank of the Funza, which is crossed by two fine bridges. It has a fine external appearance; streets regular, though narrow, and all are paved; but they are kept very dirty, and badly lighted. Houses mostly of sun-dried bricks, low built, whitewashed, tiled, & placed around a central court; shops numerous. It has several squares, in the chief of which are the cathedral (nearly ruined in 1827 by an earthquake), palace of the president, & custom-house. Other principal buildings are the Capital, National College of San Bartolomo, the Astronomical Observatory, 2,636,412 metres above the level of the sea; residences of the deputies & senate, the mint, barracks, & theatre, and an abundance of churches, convents, &c. Nearly one half of the city is occupied by religious structures, & most part of the property in it belongs to the church. Bogota has a university, a school of mineralogy, Lancasterian school, national academy, museum, & public library. Bogota owes its importance to its having been for a long time the seat of government. The environs of Bogota are highly interesting. The Rio Funza, which traverses the city, joins the Rio Bogota in the centre of the plain, & the conjoint waters descend in a S.W. direction, through a ravine nearly 40 m. long. At the cataract of Tequendama, the clefts between the rocks is only 36 feet wide, & the waters descend in an unbroken mass 900 feet. In the centre is the natural bridge of Icononzo, or Pandi, formed by two rocks that unite the opposite sides of a deep mountain cleft, 300 ft. above the surface of the torrent. North of the city fossil bones of a gigantic size have been found. The Campo contains also coal-fields, & towards the N. border the rich salt mines of Zikaquira. Here also is lake Guatavita, into which it is supposed that the ancient inhabitants threw their treasure when conquered by the Spaniards.

BOHEMIA (KINGDOM OF), German Böhmen, a political & administrative division of the Austrian empire, forming the E. part of the Germanic confederation, between lat. 48° 33′ & 51° 3′ N., & lon. 12° & 16° 46′ E., bounded N. by Saxony & Pruss. Silesia, E. by Prussia & Moravia, S. by Lower Austria, & W. by Bavaria. Cap. Prag (Prague). Area, 20,096¼ sq. ms. Pop. 1851, 4,404,900. The territory forms an enclosed plateau, nearly surrounded by elevated chains of mntns., the chf. of which are the Riesengebirge (Giant mntns.) on the N., the Sudetengebirge N.E., the Böhmerwald (Boh. Forest mntns.) S.W., & Erzgebirge (Ore mntns.) in the N.W. The interior is traversed by the contreforts of these chains. Its principal valleys are those of the Elbe & Moldau. Forming the upper basin of the Elbe, to which nearly all its streams are tributary, the country is richly watered. The Elbe rises in the Riesengebirge, & receives on the rt. the Isar, & on the lt. the Aupe, Mettau, Erlitz, Moldau, Eger, & Bila. The Moldau, the largest river in the kgdm., receives on the rt. the Czazawa & the Luschnitz, on the lt. the Watawa & the Beraun. The climate is in general healthy, mild in the valleys, but cold in the mntnous. regions; the higher mntns. being covered with snow during great part of the year. Soil in general fertile, especially in the N. & N.E., in the valleys of the Eger & Elbe. It is very rich in metals, minerals, & precious stones; the productive part of the land forms nearly 13–16ths of the superficies. Bohemia is both an agricultural & a manufacturing country, but especially rich in the produce of its agriculture. The principal crops are rye, oats, & potatoes. Fruit is grown in great abundance; flax is raised of an excellent quality, & the hops are considered the best in Germany. Beet-root, for the manuf. of sugar, has been grown in considerable quantity of late years. Vines are grown only in part of the valley of the Elbe. The forests yield a very large amount of timber. The rearing of cattle as a branch of industry has been much neglected, but is on the increase. The produce of the mines, especially in precious metals, has been for centuries one of the principal sources of wealth; the chief mining districts are in the Erzgebirge & the contreforts of the Fichtelgebirge. The gold mines, formerly so valuable, are now entirely abandoned, & the silver mines have lost much of their importance; but the produce of iron & coal is greatly on the increase. Among the other metals & minerals are cinnabar, bismuth, chrome, zinc, sulphur, alum, & marble. Bohemia possesses a great number of mineral springs of all kinds, among the most celebrated of which are those of Franzensbrünnen, Marienbad, Karlsbad, Töplitz, & Bilin. In manufacturing industry this country has long been considered one of the most important provs. of the empire. The chief seat of this industry is in the N. provs. & among the German pop. of the mntns.: it consists principally in thread, linens, cotton, iron, woollens, glass, & paper. The manuf. of glass, though less important than formerly, still retains its celebrity for beauty & cheapness. The commerce of the country consists in the exportation of the products of the soil & manufs., the importation of colonial goods, & the transit of merchandise from N. Germany to Austria, Switzerland, & Italy. The Elbe & the Moldau are navigated by steam packets, & the latter communicates with the Danube by a horse railroad from Budweis to Linz. Prague is connected by railroad with Dresden on the N. & Vienna on the South. Bohemia, with the title of kgdm., forms a provincial government of the Austrian empire, having certain political privileges: it is comprised in the states of the Germanic confederation. The Emperor of Austria bears the title of King of Bohemia, & is crowned at Prague. It came into the possession of the house of Austria in 1526. It consists of 7 circles; Budweis, Eger, Boehmisch-Leipa, Gitchin, Pardubitz, Pilsen, & Prague. The Roman Catholic is the religion of the state, & the other sects are only tolerated. Bohemia possesses numerous establishments for public instruction. The university of Prague is one of the most anc. & celeb. in Germany; it has 70 professors & teachers, & 2,750 students. The kgdm. has 3 episcopal schools, 22 gymnasia, with 5,683 pupils. Private schools 3,490, attended by 516,831 pupils. There are many learned societies in Bohemia, with which are connected public libraries, botanic gardens, & scientific collections, & it has charitable institutions in all the principal cities. The chief fortifications are at Prague, Josephstadt, Königgrätz, & Theresienstadt. (See Austrian Empire.)

BOKHARA, or UZBEKISTAN (land of the Uzbeks), a state, Central Asia, indep. Turkestan, between lat. 36° & 41° N., & lon. 63° & 70° E., having N. the Sea of Aral & the country of Khokan, E. Koondooz, S. the Oxus, & W. Khiva. Estimated area, 235,000 sq. m. Pop. 1,000,000. Surface level; fertile where watered by the Oxus, Kohik, & Kurshee, its principal rivers, but elsewhere mostly a sandy waste. Rice, wheat, barley, maize, cotton, indigo, & fine fruits, are chief objects of culture. Timber is very scarce. Cattle & live stock of most kinds are numerous; some breeds of horses are very excellent; camels are the principal beasts of burden. Cotton thread, silk stuffs, shagreen, sabres, & other cutlery, gold, silver, & turned articles, & fire-arms are manufactured, & by its position between the Russian dom., & S. Asia, the country has considerable commercial importance. Exports comprise silk, cotton, wool, coarse chintzes, cotton thread, lambskins, lapis lazuli, dried fruits; imports, muslins, Benares brocades, white cloth, sugar, & shawls, from the S.; & from Russia numerous kinds of European manufs., a large quantity of which is British. From Chinese Turkestan, coarse porcelain, musk, tea in great quantities, silks, rhubarb, Tibet wool, &c., are received. The Khan, though nominally despotic, is greatly under the influence of the priesthood, & Mohammedanism is perhaps more strict in this than in any other country of Asia. Public rev. estimated at about 400,000*l.*, annually. Armed force about 20,000 horse & 4,000 foot, indep. of a militia of 50,000 cavalry. Principal cities, Bokhara, Samarcand, Balkh, & Kurshee.

BOKHARA, ("the treasury of sciences,") a celeb. city, Central Asia, cap. above Khanat, near the Zerafshan riv., 130 m. W.S.W. Samarcand. Lat. 39° 48′ N., lon. 64° 26′ E. Pop. estim. by Burnes at 160,000. It is said to be 8 m. in circ., enclosed by earthen ramparts, entered by 12 gates, & intersected by numerous canals. Streets very narrow, & houses mostly small & flat-roofed. In the centre is the citadel, containing the palace, harem, & residences of the state-officers, with the royal stables, barracks, &c. Bokhara is said to have 360 mosques, several of great architectural beauty, & at least as many colleges & schools, this city having been long famous as a seat of Mohammedan learning. There are 20 caravansaries, & 100 ponds & fountains. Among its pop. are about 4,000 Jews, who carry on an active commerce; here may be met the natives & merchants of Persia, Turkey, Russia, Tartary, China, India, & Cabool. Tradition assigns the foundation of Bokhara to the age of Alexander the Great; it was ruined by Jenghis Khan in 1219, & was not rebuilt until the end of his reign. Under Timour it flourished anew, & it is now one of the richest cities in Central Asia. It has acquired unfortunate notoriety from the immolation of Col. Stoddard & Capt. Conolly within its walls.

BOLIVIA, REPUBLIC OF, S. America, between lat. 9° 30′ & 25° 30′ S., lon. 57° 40′ & 70° 40′ W., having N. & E. Brazil, S. the Argentine Republic, W. Chili & Peru, with only a short coast-line on the Pacific, at its S. W. extremity. Extreme length 1,100 m.; extreme width 800 m.

The Republic is divided into seven departments & two provinces, having departmental governments. The departments are subdivided into provinces, which are named from the principal towns in each as follows:—

Provinces.		Provinces.
Chuquisaca.	Chuquisaca.	Cochabamba.	Cochabamba.
	Cinti.		Sacaba.
	Yamparaes.		Tapacari.
	Tomina.		Arque.
La Paz.	La Paz de Ayacucho.		Ayopaya.
	Pacajes.		Clisa.
	Sicasica.		Misque.
	Yungas.	Santa Cruz.	S. Cruz de la Sierra.
	Omasuyos.		Valle Grande.
	Larecaja.		Cordillera.
Potosi.	Potosi.		Chiquitos.
	Lipes.	Beni.	Caupolican, or Apolabamba.
	Porco.		Moxos.
	Chayanta.		Yuracares.
	Chichas.		Prov. de Cobija, includg. Alacama.
Oruro.	Oruro.		Provincia de Tariha, or Tarija.
	Pacopa.
	Carangas.

The population of the Republic is variously estimated, and is probably between 1,330,000 & 1,500,000, including Indians.

All the centre of the country is covered with ramifications of the Andes, which here divide into two cordilleras, enclosing the Lake of Titicaca. The W. Cordillera forms the boundary on the side of Peru, betw. lat. 16° & 22° S., & here are the highest peaks of the Andes (Sorato being 25,250 feet), & the volcanoes of Atacama, Tacora, &c. The region between the Pacific and the Andes is nearly barren, and is called the desert of Atacama. The valley of Titicaca is rather fertile, especially in the vicinity of the lake. The long valleys S. of the Sierra de la Cruz, are the most populous & best cultivated parts of Bolivia, especially the valley of Cochabamba. The Yunga valleys N. of Sierra de la Cruz are also fertile. The plains of Moxos & Chuquitos are covered with dense forests. The streams which descend from the W. valley of the Andes do not reach the Pacific, except the Loa, which flows 180 m., but with a very scanty supply of water. Numerous rivers descend from the E. declivity of the Andes. These belong to the basins of either the Amazon or La Plata; among the former class, the Beni, Mamore, Rio Grande, or Guapai, tributaries of the Madeira, are the principal; and, among the latter, the Pilcomayo & Paraguay. The Desaguadero has its entire course, about 200 m., in Bolivia; it flows out of Lake Titicaca, the largest lake in S. America. Besides L. Titicaca, the S.E. half of which is in this republic, many others exist in the wide plains in the E., a region which is stated to be little above the sea level. In the middle region the rainy season and extensive inundations last from Nov. to Feb.; but on the coast rain seldom falls. Amongst the vegetable productions are cacao of the finest quality, cotton, indigo, rice, barley, oats, potatoes, maize, sugar-cane, cinchona (Peruvian bark), & numerous other valuable drugs, the finest fruits, and timber fit for every purpose. Gold is found in all the rivers in the E. Cordillera of the Andes; recently a very rich region has been discovered within seven days' journey of La Paz. The productiveness of the silver mines of Potosi were for a long time very great, though now on the decline. In 1840, silver to the value of 2,600,507 dollars, & gold to 230,830 dollars, are stated to have been coined at Potosi; lead, tin, salt, sulphur, nitre, are also met with. Copper mines are also abundant, but are too far inland to be wrought to advantage. Among the wild animals are the tapir, jaguar, leopard, several species of monkeys, and amphibious reptiles, birds, & fishes in great numbers. The climate of the plains is too hot for sheep; but vast herds of cattle feed on the banks of the rivers, & the llama, guanaco, & vicuna inhabit the mntns. More than 3-4ths of the population are Indians, the rest Mestizos, Spaniards, & a few Africans. The native pop. of the valley of Titicaca consists of Peruvians, who follow agriculture & the rearing of cattle. The plains are inhabited by numerous tribes. The Moxos, who are said to have been civilized by the missionaries 200 years ago, have become agricultural. The Chuquitos still retain their nomadic habits. The tribes on the Beni are wild & warlike, & in a savage condition. Some of the tribes manuf. fine cloths, fans, parasols, &c.; the other principal manufs. are of cotton goods, & glass wares at Cochabamba, cloths of llama and alpaca hair at La Paz, hats of vicuna wool at Atacama, vessels of silver wire in the mining dists.; but they are all comparatively insignificant in extent. The foreign commerce of Bolivia is small, owing to its being almost shut out by the Andes from contact with the sea. Foreign goods mostly come from Peru by way of Arica & Tacna, & are subject to a high transit duty. Imports are mostly confined to iron, hardwares, silk, & a few other articles; & the exports to the precious metals, wool, woollen goods, and hats, pewter; cacao leaf, cinchona, and other drugs, bark, skins, soap, and tobacco. The executive government is vested in a president; the legislative functions are exercised by a senate, tribunes, and censors. The country is divided into 3 bishoprics; but there is no church exclusively supported by the state. Public rev. 1850, 1,976,217 piastres. Expenses, 1,738,744. Standing army about 2,000 men. Bolivia, under the name of Upper Peru, was formerly a part of the Spanish viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres; but it acquired its independence in 1824, & its name was assumed in honor of Bolivar, who, in 1826, drew up its earliest constitution. Chuquisaca is the cap. & seat of general government. Cobija is the only seaport.

BOLKENHAIN, a town of Pruss. Silesia, cap. circ. on lt. b. of the Neisse. Pop. 2,450. Linen & woollen manufs. W. of the t. is the ruin of Bolkoburg tower.

BOLOGNA (anc. Felsinæ, afterwards Bononia), a famous city of Italy, & the second in rank in the Pontif. states, cap. legation, finely situated in a plain N. of the Apennines, on the canal of Bologna, 24 m. S.E. Modena, & 27 m. S.W. Ferrara. Lat. of observatory 44° 29′ 54″ N., lon. 11° 21′ E. Elevation 205 ft. above the sea. Pop. 1843 of Sega. 348,652, of the city, 1850, 71,500. The city forms an oval, enclosed by a brick wall, about 2 m. in length, by 1¼ m. in breadth, entered by 12 gates, & intersected by the Reno canal. With its rich & varied colonnades, affording a pleasant shelter from the sun & rain, well-paved streets, noble institutions, & a flourishing, intelligent, & learned pop., it rivals Rome in all except classical & religious interest, & the extent of its museums. Bologna is one of the great centres of public instruction in Italy. Its university, the oldest in the peninsula, & one of the most ancient in Europe (founded 1119), had, in 1841, 560 students. It has an academy of the fine arts, with rich galleries of painting & sculpture, a grand school of music, extens. libraries, cabinets, an observatory, & a botanic garden, one of the richest in Europe. It is said to have 100 churches, 35 convents for monks, and 38 for nuns, all of which are adorned with fine works of art. Principal churches, San Stefano, one of the oldest in Italy; the cathedral, a fine edifice of the 17th & 18th centuries, with paintings by L. Caracci; San Petronio, with magnificent works, & the meridian of Cassini traced on the floor; St. Dominic, St. Bartolomeo, &c., many of which date from the early centuries of the Christian era. The other principal edifices are the palazzo publico, podestá palace, registry, chamber of commerce, scuole pie, numerous fine private palaces (including one built for Rossini in 1825), and the famous tower of Asinelli, the loftiest in Italy, built in 1110, & the leaning tower of Garisenda, from the top of which former it is said that 103 cities may be seen. In the principal square is a large fountain with a fine statue of Neptune. Outside of the city an arcade nearly 3 m. in length, leads to the church of the Madonna di San Luca. Bologna has numerous hospitals, theatres, academies, learned societies, & schools; manufactories of crape, chemical products, wax candles, musical instruments, paper, cards, & mortadelle, or sausages, in high repute; & a considerable trade in other products.

BOLONCHEN, a thriving vill. of Yucatan, Mex., 50 m. N.E. Campeche. Pop. 7,000. In the vicinity is a deep cavern in the limestone rock, where there is a copious supply of water.

BOLOR-TAGH, a great mntn. chain of Central Asia, which separates the Chinese Empire on the E. from Koondooz, & Kafiristan on the W. It extends between lat. 35° & 45° N., & lon. 70° & 75° E., forming a part of the table-land of Pamir, connected with the Hindoo Koosh on the S., & the Thian-Shan mntns. in the centre. Its culminating points between lat. 35° & 40°, are supposed to exceed 19,000 ft. in elevation. Three great passes cross this chain; two from Yarkand & Kashgar westward, about lat. 39°, & one from Budushan into Little Thibet.

BOLOTANA, a t. of Sardinia, near its centre, prov. Nuoro, cap. mand., 28 m. E. Bosa. Pop. 3,250.

BOLSAS, a river of Mexico. It rises in the state of Mexico, & shortly enters La Puebla, which it traverses in a southerly direction 80 miles, when it turns abruptly to the west, & shortly leaves this state, & pursues an almost due west course, forms the division line between the states of Guerreo & Michoacan, until it enters the Pacific Ocean 225 m. S.W. Mexico. On it are the towns Mescala, Huetamo, & Zacatula.

BOLSENA, Volsinium, a town of Italy, Pontif. sta., deleg. & 20 m. N.N.W. Viterbo, on the N. shore of the lake of Bolsena. It was one of the 12 Etruscan cities, cap. of the Volsci, and birth-place of Sejanus, but is now a miserable village. The lake of Bolsena (Lacus Volsinienesis), is 10 m. long, & 8 m. broad, surrounded by finely wooded hills, & commanding many magnificent prospects. It discharges its waters by the Marta river S.W. into the Mediterranean, & in it are the two small isls. Bisentina & Martana.

BOLSHERETSK, a seaport t. of N. E. Asia, Kamschatka, 120 W. Petropaulovsk. Pop. 200.

BOLSON DE MAPINI, a wild district in the states of Coahuila & Durango, Mex. It is said to be generally a low, flat, swampy country, and mostly a desert. Dr. Wislizenus says of the portion travelled by the expedition:—"At Mapini the elevation above the sea was 4,787 ft., in the valley of the Nasas at San Sebastian 3,785, San Lorengo 3,815, at San Juan 3,775, & towards the eastern edge of the Bolson I found El Pozo 3,990, & Parras 4,997 ft. above the sea." We perceive therefore that the valley of the Nasas river, which may be called the vein & centre of the Bolson, has a mean elevation of 3,800 ft. & though from 500 to 1,000 ft. lower than the surrounding country, it occupies, nevertheless, a considerable absolute elevation above the sea. The soil on the Bolson is less sandy & better than in the higher country. In the valley of the Nasas especially is a black rich soil, & most luxuriant vegetation. The Nasas is here quite a deep & respectable stream, while farther down it becomes flat, & disappears sometimes entirely in the sand. It comes about 150 leagues from the western part of the state of Durango, from the Sierra Madre mountains, and runs in a north-western and northern direction in the Bolson de Mapini, ending in a lake. The Nasas is the Nile of the Bolson de Mapini; the wide & level country along the river is yearly inundated by its risings, & owes to that circumstance its great fertility. Besides wheat & corn a good deal of cotton is raised in the valley of the river, & wine has been made with success. The climate is so mild that the root of the cotton shrub is seldom destroyed in the winter, & continues for many years.

BOLSOVER, a town & pa. of England, co. Derby, 6 m. E. Chesterfield. Area of pa. 6,060 ac. Pop. 1,611. It has an ancient church with a fine sepulchral chapel of the Cavendish family, & a castle, part of which is still habitable, & in which the Duke of Newcastle entertained Charles I. in 1633. Principal manuf. tobacco-pipes, that of steel buckles having long since declined. The charities of the pa. have an aggregate income of 104*l.* per annum.

BOLSTER'S MILLS, p-o., Cumberland co., Me., 68 m. S.W. Augusta, 578 W.

BOLSWARD, a fortified t. of the Netherlands, prov. Friesland, cap. cant., 14 m. S.W. Leeuwarden. Pop. 4,223. It has a Latin school, manufs. of woollen, & a large trade in butter.

Area of pa. 30,062 ac. Pop. 1851, 87,280. Pop. of borough, chiefly composed of the township & Little Bolton, 61,171. It is well supplied with water, & of late years several new squares & many handsome villas have been constructed, mostly on the S. side. There are 36 churches,—2 Baptist, 1 Brethren, 9 Episcopal, 1 Friends', 5 Independent, 11 Methodist, 1 New Church, 1 Presbyterian, 2 Roman Catholic, 1 Unitarian, & 2 isolated congregations,—a grammar school founded in 1641, a charity school endowed in 1693, 2 town-halls, 2 cloth-halls, a neat exchange, theatre, assembly & concert rooms, &c. It has several good libraries, a mechanics' institute, daily & Sunday schools, & several large charity endowments, including the Popplewell's munificent legacy of 27,700*l.* 3 per cents., for the promotion of religion & learning for the poor. The woollen manufs. of Bolton, introduced by Flemings in 1337, were in a flourishing state before the reign of Henry VIII.; but the great prosperity of the town dates from the introduction of the invention of Arkwright & Crompton, constructors of the mule-jenny, both natives of this parish, which has since become, through their labors, one of the principal seats of the English cotton manufacture. In 1838, there were 69 cotton mills, employing 9,918 hands, chiefly in the manuf. of muslins, fine calicoes, cotton shawls, quiltings, jeans, fustians, &c.; & the average quantity of cloth bleached in the parish annually, has been estimated at from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 pieces. Bolton has also large paper, flax, & saw mills, chemical works, & foundries. The numerous coal-pits wrought in the vicinity, with canal carriage to Manchester, have greatly promoted the prosperity of the town, now still further advanced by a railroad to Bury & Manchester, another to Leigh, forming an easy communication with Liverpool, & a third with Preston & the N. Mkts. Saturday & Monday. Fairs, July 30 & 31, & October 13 & 14. It is the head of a poor-law union. Since the reform act, Bolton has sent two members to H. of Commons.

There are in the t. a fulling m., a woollen fac., 2 tanneries, a flouring m., a grist m., 5 saw m., 10 schools. Pop. 1840. 1,446; 1850, 1,963.

BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, the most westerly, & the smallest of the three presids. of British India, mostly between lat. 14° & 24° N., & lon. 72° & 76° E., having N.W. & N. the Guicowar's dom., E. the territories of Indore & the Nizam, S. Goa, Mysore, & the Madras presid., & W. the Indian Ocean. Area, with Scinde & Sattara, 120,065 sq. m. Pop. 10,485,017, & is composed of the following subdivisions: Bombay Island, Poonah, Ahmednuggur, Candeish, Dharwar, S. Jaghiredars, S. Concan, N. Concan, Surat, &c., Baroach, Ahmedabad, Kaira, Sattara, &c. The W. Ghauts separate the W. or marit. from the E. dists., which latter form a part of the great table-land of the Deccan. In the N. the mntns. belong to the Sautpoora & other ranges connected with the Vindhyan chain. Principal rivers, the Nerbudda, Taptee, Mhye, & Sabermutty, falling into the Gulf of Cambay; above the Ghauts, the rivers are tributary to the Godavery & Kistnah. Climate for the most part less hot & more healthy than in the other presids., a great part of the country being under the influence of the sea-breezes. Rice & cotton are the principal articles of culture, & the cotton of this presidency is decidedly superior to that of the others. Some sugar & indigo are raised in Candeish. Opium is nowhere cultivated, & other great staples of Indian produce are only produced in small quantities; but in return, the cardamoms, pepper, & teak, exported from India, are almost exclusively the growth of this region. The N. dists. are famous for their great variety of fruits: cocoa palms cover a very large extent of sandy land in the Concan, &c.; wool has lately been exported in considerable quantities from Bombay; & great exertions have been made to introduce the culture of silk. The cattle of Gujerat are a large & fine breed; W. of the Ghauts, the ox & buffalo are almost the only domestic animals. The whole presid. is assessed under the native village-system of India, except the dists. of Surat & Kaira, where the ryotwarry system is in force. Principal manufs. are of embroidered silks, & woollen & cotton cloths. For an account of the foreign trade, see Bombay city. Government vested in a governor & 4 members of council, & a provisional one; the whole administration being subordinate to the gov. general of India in council. In the cap. of each collectorate is the seat of a British collector & a judge, subordinate to the central court of Bombay. A few years ago the army comprised about 30,000 men & officers, of whom 6,250 were Europeans. The whole of the Indian marine is attached to this presidency. In the S. there are many native & Roman Catholic & Nestorian christians. The Parsees are now almost confined to this part of Asia. Rev. 1849, 24,603,376 rupees. There are in the presidency an English episcopal bishopric with 24 clergy, a Scottish kirk, & Roman Catholic establishments, which receive government aid. Elphinstone college was founded in 1857, & there are 120 schools for the native Hindoos, in which from 8 to 900 boys receive education, besides nearly 2,000 native village schools. Bombay was the earliest possession of the British in the east. It was ceded by the Moguls to the Portuguese in 1530, & it came into the possession of the English in 1662, as a part of the dowry of the Infanta of Portugal, on her marriage with Charles II.; but by far the greater part of the territory has been acquired between 1803 & 1818. (See India.)

BOMBAY (Portuguese Buon-Bahia, "good harbor"), a city, seaport & cap. of the above presidency, is situated on a narrow neck of land at the S.E. extremity of the island of Bombay. Lat. 18° 56′ N., lon. 72° 55′ E. In 1716 the pop. was 16,000. In 1816 161,359, & according to the Bombay Calendar 1845, 235,000. Of these, two-thirds are Hindoos, 20,000 Parsees, & the rest Musselmans, Jews, & Christians; with a great variety of fluctuating pop., chiefly sailors & traders. It consists of the fort or old town, 1 m. in length by ¼ m. in breadth, & in which the European inhabitants, & most of the Parsee merchants reside; & the new town, about 1 m. distant N.ward, inhabited by the Hindoos & Mohammedan native pop., beyond which suburb are many detached villas & bungalows, belonging to European & other residents. Bombay has a lively appearance from the sea; but as a city, it is greatly inferior to Calcutta or Madras. The houses within the walls are built of wood, & covered with tiles. Principal edifices in the fort are the court-house, secretariate, & other government offices, custom-house, town-hall, castle, mint, cathedral of St. Thomas, St. Andrew's Scotch church, European hospital, &c. In the centre of the fort is an irregular open space called the "Green;" & outside of the massive fortifications is the esplanade. In the new town are Elphinstone college, Sir J. Jejeebhoy's hospital, the Byculla church & club, the house of correction, theatre, & the great Hindoo temple of Momba Devi. On the S.W. the fort is connected by Colabba causeway, with the isl. of Colabba, on which are the lighthouse, observatory, lunatic asylum, some mercantile buildings, & a stone pier. The government-house is at Parell, 6 m. N. of the fort. There are 2 banks,—the Bank of Bombay, & the Commercial Bank of India. The property of the isl. belongs principally to the Parsees, who are the chief merchants & monied men. The harbor of Bombay is one of the best in India, & affords good anchorage for ships of the largest burden. On it are also excellent building & other docks for ships of the first class. Next to Calcutta & Canton, Bombay is the principal commercial emporium in the east, & for many years its trade has been uniformly increasing. The imports from China are greater than at either of the other presids., & consist of raw silk, sugar, & sugar-candy, silk piece goods, treasure, &c. Imports from Great Britain are cotton & woollen stuffs, cotton yarn, hardwares, copper, iron, lead, glass, apparel, furs, wine, beer; amongst the other articles imported are ivory, spices, coffee, & the produce generally of Persia, Arabia, & the Malay archipelago. Of the entire value of the imports into Bombay, amounting in 1848 to 3,745,692*l*., those from Great Britain amounted to 1,289,757*l*. Value of exports, same year, 5,640,189*l*.; those to Great Britain were only 951,370*l*., & those to China, 2,959,169*l*. In 1837 a steam navigation was commenced between Bombay & Suez; three steamers were at first employed, which the war in 1843 increased to 8; & a regular monthly passage is now made from London to India, under the arrangements of the Oriental Steam Navigation Company.—Bombay Island, on which the city is built, is 8 m. in length, & 3 in breadth, & is formed of two ranges of greenstone, connected in the middle by sandstone strata. The interior lies low, & was at one time liable to be flooded by the tide, but an embankment was erected to keep out the sea.

BOOTAN, or BHOTAN, a country of N. Hindostan, partly independent, but according to recent information, partly also dependent on Tibet, between lat. 26° 30′ & 28° 30′ N., lon. 88° 30′ & 94° E., having W. Sikkim, S. & E. Bengal & Assam, & N. the main chain of the Himalaya, which here rises to 25,000 ft. in elevation. Total area has been loosely estim. at 64,500 sq. m. Pop. 1,500,000. (?) Surface wholly mntnous, with a general slope S.ward; & this region differs from most others, in its lower hill ranges having but a scanty vegetation, while its finest forests are from 8,000 to 10,000 ft. above the sea. Among its principal products are oak, pine, & other timber, rattans, numerous fruits, & esculent vegetables. Some wheat, barley, rice, maize, & buckwheat are raised in terraces along the hill sides; but supplies of grain, as also of sugar & tobacco, come mostly from Bengal, in return for native cloths, rock-salt, rhubarb, jabrung spice, a few Tibet goods, & mules & ponies of an excellent breed. Except potter's clay, iron appears to be the only mineral raised, though Bootan is reported to be rich in copper & other metals. Chief manufs. are of woven goods, paper, a species of satin from bark, tobacco-pouches, gunpowder, arms, & hardwares. Principal trade is with Bengal; from Tibet, however, some silks & rich tea are imported. Travellers in Bootan have remarked the great number of its castellated strongholds, & praise the ingenuity & solidity of its suspension & wooden bridges. Towns are few; the principal are Tassisudon & Punakka, alternately the residences of the Deb-rajah. This functionary, who is also the principal merchant in the country, exercises all the actual sovereignty; the Dharma-rajah, or nominal sovereign, consid. to have divine attributes, being vested with none of the civil power. The government appears, from the report of Capt. Pemberton, who recently visited Bootan, to be about as bad as possible, rapacity & immorality prevailing throughout nearly all ranks of the community. The state religion is Buddhism, & Bootan swarms with priests, the monastic endowments absorbing a large part of the national property. The custom of polyandry, probably peculiar to the countries of the Himalaya, is here prevalent; but polygamy also prevails, & to these causes, the comparative thinness of the pop. has been attributed.

BORDEAUX, p-o., Abbeville dist., S. C., 105 N. by W. Columbia, 553 W.

BORDEAUX, Burdigala, a city in the S.W. of France, cap. dep. Gironde, on left bank of the Garonne, 60 m. from its mouth, in the Atlantic. Lat. 44° 50′ 19″ N., lon. 0° 34′ 32″ W. Pop. 129,263. It communicates by the Paris, Orleans, Tours, & Bordeaux railroad with Paris, a distance of 366¼ miles—& by another with the port of La Teste. It is an archbishop's see, the seat of a national court, & of a university academy; cap. of the 11th military division, & has a tribunal of commerce, an exchange, & a bank with a cap. of 300,000 francs, a secondary school of medicine, college, normal school, school of navigation, & a mint. Bordeaux is one of the most flourishing cities of Europe in point of industry, commerce, & the cultivation of the arts & sciences. In the old part of the city the streets are crooked & narrow, but the new quarters, especially the rue Chapeau Rouge, the allées de Tourny; & the many public edifices are of great beauty & elegance. Situated on a navigable river, in this part about 2,600 ft. broad, & from 60 to 90 feet deep, which puts it in communication on one side with the ocean, & on the other with the Mediterranean, by the Canal du Midi, it has become the first port in the South of France. Its basin, formed by the Garonne, is capable of containing 1,200 ships of any size, & is accessible even for ships of 600 tons at all times of the tide; it has docks & building yards for every size of vessels, even for ships of the line. It is the entrepôt of prohibited goods; & has manufs. of all kinds, especially tobacco, vinegar, nitric acid, liqueurs, & chemical products; sugar & saltpetre refineries, numerous distilleries, cotton & woollen spinning, & manufs. of printed calicoes, & iron foundries. Its commerce extends to all parts of the world. Its principal expts. are wines, brandy, & fruits; chief imports, colonial merchandise, cotton goods, iron, coal, & building timber. The principal merchants are engaged in the wine trade, nearly the half of the best sorts of wine are sent to England, since little of the finest Medoc is used in France; Paris takes only the second, third, & fourth-rate wines. Before the revolution the annual export of wine amounted to 100,000 hogsheads; in 1827 the amount was 54,492. The principal fruits exported from Bordeaux, are plums & almonds. Among the most remarkable public edifices of Bordeaux, are the remains of the palace of Gallienus, the cathedral, a fine Gothic structure, the church of the Feuillants, which contains the tomb of Montaigne; the great theatre built by Louis XVI., one of the finest in Europe, seated for 4,000 persons; the exchange, the Palais Royal, formerly the archiepiscopal palace; the Hôtel de la Marine, the triumphal arch of the port Bourgogne, & especially the magnificent bridge across the Garonne, which consists of 17 arches, & is 1,595 feet in length. Under the name of Burdigalu, this was a rich & important place at the time of the conquest of the country by the Romans, who made it the cap. of the 2d Aquitania, & it was embellished by the emperors. The wines of Bordeaux were celebrated as early as the 4th century. The city was sacked by the Visigoths, who were driven from it by Clovis. It was ravaged by the Saracens & Normans in the 8th & 9th cents., & came into the possession of the dukes of Gascony in 911. In 1152 it passed, by the marriage of Henry Plantagenet with Eleonore of Guienne, under the dominion of England; since 1453 it has belonged to France. Among the many distinguished men who were born in this city & vicinity, may be noticed the poet Ausonius, Montaigne, Montesquieu, the Black Prince, Richard II. of England, & Pope Clement V., the moralist Berquin, & the painter Carle Vernet.

BORDENTOWN, p-b., Chesterfield t., Burlington co., N. J., 7 S.E. Trenton, 168 W. Situated on the E. bank of the Delaware r., built on a plain 65 feet above the surface of the r., and has 5 churches,—1 Baptist, 1 Episcopal, 1 Methodist, 1 Friends, & 1 Rom. Catholic,—5 stores, & in 1850, 2,725 inhab. The Camden & Amboy r. r. passes through the place, by a viaduct beneath its principal streets. Incorporated in 1825. It is a very neat & healthy place. Joseph Bonaparte, (Count de Survevilliers,) chose it as the place of his residence while in the United States, & erected a splendid mansion, surrounded by extensive & highly ornamented grounds. The mansion has been destroyed by fire. This place is a favorite resort of the people of Philadelphia in the summer season. The outlet of the Delaware & Raritan canal is in front of the v.

BORNEO, (native name Pulo-Kalamantin), an island of Malaysia, near the centre of the Eastern Archipelago, in the Pacific Ocean, situated between lat. 7° 4′ N., & 4° 10′ S., & lon. 108° 50′ & 119° 20′ E., divided by the equator into 2 nearly equal portions, & bounded N. & W. by the China Sea, S. by the Sea of Java, & E. by the Sea of Celebes and the Strait of Macassar. Borneo is, next to Australia, the largest island on the globe. It is of a compact form, & has few great indentations of the sea, but many extensive bays and creeks. Length 800 m., breadth 700 m. Estimated area, 300,000 sq. m. The pop. has been very variously estimated; it appears to be on the whole but thinly inhabited, 3,000,000 being the probable number, which would allow about 10 persons per square mile of the Dutch settlements. Pop. Sambas and the E. and W. coasts in 1849, 661,995. The shores are in general low & often marshy; they are surrounded by num. islets & rocks. Little is known of the interior except in the district of Banjermassin, on the S.E., and a portion of Borneo proper on the N. From recent Dutch authorities, & the map of the Baron Melville de Carnbee (1848), it appears that two nearly parallel ranges of mountains run through the island from S.W. to N.E., between which are extensive & well-watered plains. The westmost of these chains rises in the territory of Sarawak, with an elevation of about 3,280 ft., & gradually increases in elevation till it terminates near the N. coast in Mount Kini Balu, 13,698 feet in elevation; the second range, which crosses the equator, in about lon. 113° E., appears to be much lower than the former; a cross range leaves the first chain about lat. 2° N., & running S.E. extends through Banjermassin. The chief rivers are, on the N. & W. coast, the Borneo or Brunai, on which is situated the cap. of the island, and which opens into a bay of same name, in lat. 5° N. The Seriboe which falls into the China Sea, in lat. 2° 10′ N. The Batang-lopar, a magnificent river, the mouth of which, 4 miles wide, is in lat. 1° 30′ N.; on its left bank, 35 m. from its mouth, is the town of Patusen, which was strongly fortified & held by a band of pirates, but was destroyed by the expedition under Mr. Brooke in 1846. The Morotaba or Sarawak, which flows N.E. & N. nearly through the centre of the territory of same name. The Pontianak, formed by the junction of numerous streams, rises about lon. 112° 30′, and reaches the sea in lon. 109° 15′ on the equator. The Majak opens into a wide estuary in lat. 0° 50′ S. On the S. are the Pembuan, Sampet, and Mendawa, in districts of same names, between lon. 112° & 113° 30′ E. The Kahajan and Murong, or rivers of the Great & Little Dyaks, & the Banjer or Barito, which rises in the central mountains, lat. 0° 30′ N., flows first E. and then S., with a very winding course, & reaches the Java Sea by a wide estuary, in lat. 3° 30′ S., lon. 114° 35′ E., about 12 m. S. the town of Banjermassin, of which territory it forms the W. boundary. On the E. coast the Koetei forms a wide delta between lat. 0° 20′ and 1° S., and the Berou reaches the sea by several branches, about lat. 2° N. Most of these rivers are navigable, and, in so far as yet known, their banks are thickly peopled. The only known lake of importance is that of Kini Balu, S.E. of the mountain of same name, the centre of which is in lat. 5° 40′ N., lon. 117° E.; it is about 34 m. long, & 30 m. broad.

The climate is tropical in the interior, but on the N. coast it is quite European. Mineral riches are very valuable; they comprise gold, silver, diamonds, antimony ore, tin, iron, & coal. The chief diamond mines are those of Landak, in the Chinese territory, 50 m. N. E. Pontianak, on river of that name, where, 300 years ago, one of the largest known diamonds, weighing 367 carats, was found. The gold of Sambas yields half a million sterling annually. Excellent coal is worked in several places, especially in Borneo-Proper and Banjermassin, & rich iron mines were discovered in the S.E. angle of the island in 1848. The soil is perhaps the most fertile in the world. The forests furnish valuable timber, and, in common with many other islands of the Archipelago, the gutta-percha or gutta-túban tree, the concrete juice of which is now extensively employed in manufactures. Among the vegetable productions are maize, rice, yams, batatas, cocoa-nut, betel, tobacco, cotton, sugar cane, pepper, & other spices & tropical fruits. The animals which have been observed comprise the elephant, rhinoceros, & leopard; the ox, wild hog, & deer & horses; numerous species of monkeys inhabit every part of the island; among these the ourang-outang is conspicuous. The Dyaks are the aborigines of Borneo; they are divided into numerous distinct tribes, the chief being those of the interior, or hill Dyaks, & the Dyaks of the coast, many of whom are daring pirates, & cannibalism exists among many of the tribes. The Dyaks of the N. coast have been conquered by the Malays, & are treated by them with great cruelty; those of the interior of the prov. of Banjermassin, are an independent race, who maintain themselves by the cultivation of rice, by the collection of gold dust, & by traffic; they have no towns, but dwell in small kampongs of from four to ten huts; they have no written language nor religious ceremonies, but are extremely superstitious, & offer human sacrifices at their festivals. The Malay inhabitants have adopted some European customs, and, in the opinion of Sir J. Brooke, are capable of a great degree of civilization. The Chinese, who have long settled on the W. & S. coasts, are industrious & active, and the Dutch, who claim a large interest in the soil of Borneo, carry on an active trade with China & Singapore.

Borneo is divided into many separate states, governed by native chiefs; the best known of these are Brunai or Borneo Proper, which extends over the level space on the N. coast, the sultan of which is now placed under the superintendence of Sir James Brooke. Sambas, Pontianak, Simpang, & Matan, on the W. coast, Banjermassin on the S., & the territory of the sultan of Sooloo on the E. Off the N. coast of the island, & about 30 m. N.E. Brunai, is the island of Labuan, now belonging to Britain [LABUAN], & on the N. coast, near the N.W. part of the island, is the territory of Sarawak, extending between lat. 1° & 2° N., & lon. 109° 40′ & 110° 45′ E., bounded W. & S. by the mntns. of Krimbang, & watered by the river Sarawak, & numerous tributaries. This territory enjoys an excellent climate, is rich in mineral & agricultural products, & is admirably situated for trade. The capital is Sarawak (formerly called Kuchin). Pop. estimated at 12,000, including 150 Chinese. Under the government of Sir James Brooke, the inhabs. of this part of Borneo have commenced a hopeful career of civilization; an English church mission has been established, & a native school built at the town of Sarawak, which, previous to his visit, comprised only a few mud houses, & about 1,500 inhabitants.

The authority of the Dutch extends over a great portion of the island, which they divide politically into the residency of the W. coast, cap. Pontianak, & the residency of the S. & E. coasts, cap. Banjermassin. By a decree of the governor-general of the Netherlands East Indies, dated 28th February 1846, these possessions are henceforth to form a special government. [BANJERMASSIN-PONTIANAK.] Borneo was discovered by the Portuguese in 1521. The English & Portuguese several times attempted to found establishments on its coasts without success. The Dutch had extensive commercial relations with the W. coast, where they had factories at Sockadana & Pontianak, at the commencement of the 17th century; part of the W. coast was ceded to them by the king of Bantam, in 1780, & they founded the establishment of Pontianak in 1823. The sovereignty of the S. coast was ceded to the Dutch by the sultan of Banjermassin in 1787: but the most important event in the recent history of Borneo, & one likely to lead to the most beneficial results as regards civilization & commerce, is the enterprise of Sir James Brooke, who first visited the island in 1839, & has since been actively engaged in the suppression of piracy, the administration of justice, & the encouragement of commerce & manufactures.

BORNEO, or BRAUNI, cap. prov. of same name, near the N. coast of the island of Borneo, & on the lt. b. of the riv. Brauni, in lat. 52° 30′ N., lon. 114° 52′ E. It is built on piles in the river, & defended by batteries. Pop. 22,000. (?)

It is defended by a strong citadel, & was formerly surrounded by walls, now in ruins: it is the seat of many of the chief authorities of the prov.; has manufs. of fire-arms, jewellery, leather, & woollen goods, & is the principal entrepôt for the commerce of Turkey, Dalmatia, Croatia, & S. Germany. In the vicinity are extensive iron mines, & the mineral baths of Seraievsko. The town derives its name from an old palace (Serai) built by Mohammed II., & the inhabitants enjoy a municipal administration, nearly independent of the pacha, who resides at Travnik.

BOSNIA, a prov. of European Turkey, comprising Bosnia Proper, Turkish Croatia, & Herzegovina, situated at the extreme W. part of the empire, between lat. 42° 30′ & 45° 15′ N., bounded N. & W. by the provs. of Austria, S. by Montenegro & Albania, & E. by Servia. Area estimated at 18,500 sq. ms. Pop. 1844, 1,100,000. Surface almost wholly mountous., is traversed by the chain of the Dinaric Alps, & covered by its contreforts, & those of the Julian Alps, rising in many places upwards of 6,000 ft. A great part of it is situated in the basin of the Danube, & watered by the Save & its affls., the Verba, Bosna, & Drin. The S. portion (Herzegovina) is watered by the Narento, an affl. of the Mediterranean. The soil is in general ill suited for cultivation, except in the valley of the Save. On the N. slopes of the Dinaric Alps are extensive forests, yielding valuable timber, & the pasturage is excellent. Wheat, barley, & maize, are raised in sufficient quantity for home consumption, & in the S. districts, flax, tobacco, wines, & olives. Fruits are cultivated in great abundance, especially prunes, of which a species of wine is prepared. The rearing of cattle is an important branch of agriculture: the horses are of an excellent breed, & the sheep furnish a celebrated kind of wool. Croatia is renowned for its honey. The mntns. contain gold mines, which were worked by the Romans, & mines of silver & mercury; but the government permits only the mining of iron, & that of lead in one or two places. Manuf. industry is limited to fire-arms, leather, woollen & cotton stuffs, & gunpowder. Chief exports, leather, hides, wool, goats' hair, honey, cattle, timber, & mineral waters. Imports, colonial produce, silks, paper, salt, oil, & dried fruits. Transit trade considerable between Turkey & the Austrian States. The roads are very bad, & in general only practicable for beasts of burden. The Bosniaks are of Sclavonian origin, & a good many belong to the Greek church. As a frontier province, Bosnia is one of the most important in the empire: it has a great number of fortifications. Previous to 640 it was governed by independent princes, called Bans or Waiwodes, who became vassals to Hungary. The Turks rendered it tributary in 1463, & it was united to the empire by Soliman II., in 1522.

BOSPHORUS (properly BOSPORUS), or the CHANNEL OF CONSTANTINOPLE, Bosporus Thracius, a celeb. strait of Turkey, which separates Europe & Asia, & connects the Black Sea with the Sea of Marmora. Length N.E. to S.W. about 17 m.; breadth varies from ½ to 2 m. Shores generally elevated & very picturesque; on them are the town of Scutari, the castles of Europe & Asia, Buyukderé, Therapia, Pera, the city of Constantinople, & numerous villas. One of its chief gulfs is the harbor of Constantinople, or the "golden horn." —II. Cimmerian Bosporus, an inlet of the Black Sea, is safe, being deep, & without shoals. [YENIKALE (STRAIT OF).]

BOSTICK'S MILLS, p. o., Richmond co., N. C., 122 S.W. Raleigh, 396 W.

BOSTON, city, capital of Mass. & metropolis of New England, the second commercial city, & the fourth in population in the United States of America; is mostly situated on a peninsula, 3 miles long, & a little more than 1 mile broad, at the head of Massachusetts bay. The harbor extends from Point Alderton to Medford, a distance of 14 miles; is 8 miles in width, & covers an area of 75 square miles. It has a depth of water sufficient for 500 vessels of the largest class, to ride at anchor in safety. The entrance is barely sufficient for 2 ships of a large class to sail abreast, & is defended by 3 fortresses, 2 of which, situated on Georges & Castle islands, are on the largest scale, & constructed with all the improvements of modern science; the third, or the citadel, on Governor's island, is still incomplete, but when finished, the defences may be considered impregnable.

The territory now covered by the city, was in 1630, a peninsula connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus—this tract contained 600 acres—it was called Shawmut, or Trimountain, & derived its name from its springs, & three lofty hills. The spot was undoubtedly selected for its security from the inroads of the Indians, & its facilities for trade. Before the Revolutionary War, Boston became the most commercial town in the Colonies. The narrow limits of the peninsula have long since been found insufficient for the growth of the population, & her extended commerce. Dorchester Point, containing 600 acres, was first annexed, then Noddles island, comprising 600 acres more, & several hundred acres have been reclaimed from the sea, but so rapid has been the increase of population, that the number of inhabitants of the suburbs within a few miles of the city limits, nearly equals the city proper. Boston lies in 42° 21′ 27″ N. lat., 71° 3′ 30″ W. lon., from Greenwich, Eng. It is 105 m. S.S.W. from Portland, Me.; 216 m. from New York, via Stonington, 226 via New Haven & Springfield; 313 Philadelphia; 411 Baltimore; 449 Washington; 990 Charleston, S. C., & 1,838 from New Orleans. The population in 1790 was 18,033; in 1800, 24,937; in 1810, 33,250; in 1820, 43,298; in 1830, 61,391; in 1840, 93,383; in 1850, 138,788; & in 1854, 178,000.

Boston has overstepped her sea-girt isles, & attached herself to the mainland by one wide, natural avenue, the Neck, paved, & planted with trees; by one granite structure, the Western avenue, a mile & a half in length, 6 bridges, 8 railroads, & 3 ferries; eight railroads branch into 16, & 10 avenues divide into 30, within the first 9 miles from the Exchange. The city exhibits a picturesque & beautiful appearance when approached from the sea, & in surveying its several parts, the visitor finds much to admire. Beacon Hill, on which the State House stands, is 110 feet above high water mark; it was originally 30 feet higher. Fort Hill, on the east side, fronting the harbor, is 80 feet, & Copp's Hill, in the north part, is 50 feet above high water. On this hill the British had a battery in 1775, from which, during the memorable battle of Bunker Hill, they bombarded & burnt Charlestown. Mount Washington, or Dorchester Heights, is 130 feet above the sea. On these heights, the Americans under Washington, erected a fortification in 1775, which soon compelled the British to evacuate Boston.

Public Grounds.—Boston Common contains 48 acres, enclosed by an iron fence, 5,932 feet in length, & cost upwards of $100,000. The Common occupies the declivity of Beacon Hill, & has a pleasant & diversified surface. It is a favorite resort of the citizens, & has many historical recollections, in which the Bostonians feel an honest pride. It has gravel walks, shaded with trees, & forms one of the most delightful promenades. It contains a lake, formerly known as Crescent Pond, but now called Quincy Lake, in commemoration of a name dear to the Bostonians, as an honored son of Massachusetts, John Quincy Adams.—Fort Hill, another spot favored by the citizens, is planted with elms & other trees, & is kept in excellent order.—Bluestone Square is handsomely ornamented with trees & a fountain.—Franklin Square, about the same size as the foregoing.—Chester Square, contains a fountain, & is handsomely fenced.—Union Park, between Suffolk & Tremont sts., contains 16,500 ft. of land.—Worcester Square, between Washington & Harrison avenues, & is handsomely ornamented with fountains, trees, &c. The Square in front of Dr. Lowell's church, on Cambridge st., has been beautifully ornamented, & now forms a favorite resort.

Public Buildings.—The State House occupies an elevated position, overlooking the common towards the south, & the grounds are ornamented by two fountains. This edifice is 173 feet long & 61 wide. The lower story has a large hall or public walk in the centre, & in the middle of the south side of this story, is a statue of Washington, by Chantry. The rooms above, are the Representatives' room, in the centre, 55 feet square; the Senate chamber, 55 feet long, & 33 feet wide, & 30 feet high, with two screens of Ionic columns, supporting with their entablature, a richly decorated arched ceiling. In another part of the building is the Council chamber, 27 feet square. The dome is ascended by a spiral stairway; on the inside, & from its top, is presented a view of the harbor, the bay, & the surrounding country. FANEUIL HALL, was erected in 1742 by a gentleman whose name it bears, & was by him presented to the city. It was enlarged in 1805, & is now 100 feet long, & 80 wide, & three stories high; the lower story is occupied by stores. The great hall in the second story is 76 feet square, & 28 feet high, with galleries on three sides, supported by Doric columns, & the ceiling is supported by 2 ranges of Ionic columns. The west end is ornamented by a full-length portrait of Washington, by Stuart, & another of Peter Faneuil, Esq., copied from the original picture. Above the great hall is another, in the third story, devoted to military exercises. This venerable building has been appropriately called the cradle of American liberty. It is the property of the city, & secured by its charter from ever being devoted to any but public purposes. The Custom House, built in the Doric order of architecture, is at the foot of State street, between the heads of Long & Central wharves. It is in the form of a cross; the extreme length being 140 feet, breadth, 95 ft.; the longest arms of the cross are 75 ft. wide, & the shortest, 67 ft., the opposite fronts & ends being alike. The entire height to the top of the dome is 90 ft. Each front has a portico of six columns, 32 ft. high, & 5 ft. 4 in. in diameter, & it is approached by 14 steps. The structure rests upon 3,000 piles. The Exchange, a handsome new building fronts on State street; it is 70 ft. high, & 250 ft. deep, covering about 13,000 ft. of ground. The front is built of Quincy granite, with four pilasters, each 45 ft. high. The roof is of wrought iron, & covered with galvanized sheet iron, & all the principal staircases are fireproof, being constructed of stone & iron. The front is occupied by banks, insurance, & other offices, & the rear as an hotel; on the lower floors are bathing rooms, & at the top is a telegraph station. The centre of the basement story is occupied by the Post Office. The great central hall is 58 by 80 ft., having 18 columns 20 ft. in height, with Corinthian capitals. This room is used for the merchants' exchange, & subscribers' reading room. The Court House, a fine building in Court sq., fronting on Court st., is built of Quincy granite. It contains four court rooms, 50 ft. by 40, & large & commodious offices for the respective departments. The City Hall is near the Court House, & fronting on School st., with an open yard in front. The Massachusetts Hospital, built of granite, occupies an area of four acres fronting on Charles river, & has recently been enlarged. The Massachusetts Medical College (formerly in Mason st.), near the Massachusetts Hospital, a large brick edifice has recently been erected for it. Harvard University, located in Cambridge, was founded in 1636, & takes its name from the Rev. John Harvard, who left a legacy of £779 17s. 2d. stg. It has 33 professors, & a library of 61,000 volumes. The annual commencement is on the last Wednesday in August. The Athenæum, in Beacon st., has a library of 57,000 volumes, together with a rich cabinet of medals, coins, &c. Besides an extensive reading-room, furnished with American & European periodicals & newspapers, it has also a fine collection of paintings & statuary. The McLean Asylum for the insane, at Somerville, occupies a fine situation, & has 15 acres of land attached to it. The Institution for the Blind, in South Boston, is erected on elevated ground, & commands a fine view of the city, harbor, & surrounding country. The Houses of Industry, Correction, & Reformation, are in South Boston, near the brow of Dorchester Heights, & occupy about 60 acres of ground. Faneuil Hall Market, completed in 1827, is built entirely of granite, & is 536 ft. long, & 50 wide, with a portico at each end; the centre of the building is a dome of fine proportions. The Musical Hall is in Broomfield st. The Masonic Temple is situated on Tremont st., opposite to the Common. The Melodeon is on Washington near Bedford st. The Tremont Temple, formerly the Tremont theatre, is on Tremont near School st. Armory Hall, corner of Washington & West sts. Concert Hall, corner of Court & Hanover sts. Congress Hall, on the corner of Congress & Milk sts. Pantheon Hall, on Washington st. above Boylston market. Washington Hall, on Washington, near Broomfield st.; Covenant Hall, on Washington st., near Boylston market, & Winthrop Hall, in Tremont Row, are occupied as Odd Fellows Lodges. The Free Masons meet at the Masonic Temple in Tremont st.

Among the principal libraries, are the following,—Boston library, 14,000 vols.; Mass. B. C. F. M. library, 3,500 vols., &c., &c. There are over 100 churches in Boston, viz.,—13 Baptist, 16 Congregational, 1 Christian, 11 Episcopal, 1 Friends, 1 Jews' Synagogue, 12 Methodist, 2 Presbyterian, 10 Roman Catholic, 1 Swedenborgian, 20 Unitarian, 7 Universalist, &c. There are published in Boston, 12 daily, 6 semi-weekly, & 57 weekly newspapers, 1 semi-monthly, 25 monthly, 4 bi-monthly, 6 quarterly, & 2 yearly publications.

The Public Schools of Boston consist of a Latin School, an English High School, a Normal School, 23 Grammar Schools, & 196 Primary Schools. The Latin, High, Normal, & Grammar Schools are under the supervision of the superintendent of public schools, subject to the direction of the school committee, by whom he is chosen, consisting of the Mayor & President of the Common Council, ex-officers, & two persons from each ward. The Primary Schools are under the superintendence of a separate committee appointed by the school committee. Their report, made Sept. 1853, gives the number of pupils, 12,096; of foreign parentage, 7,081; sent to grammar schools last six months, 1,574; now fitted for grammar schools, 1,438; number of examinations by district committee, 1,811; number of visits, 3,792.

There are in Boston, 36 banks, with an aggregate cap. of $28,018,000; 3 banks for savings; 37 insurance offices, twelve of which are founded on the mutual principle, besides 30 agencies of offices out of the city & state. Value of real & personal estate in 1850, $217,587,000. Exports 1850, $9,359,000; 1852, $14,973,918. Imports 1850, $29,909,000; 1852, 33,987,144. Tonnage 1850, 320,687; in 1853, 450,492. (See U. S. Com. Statis.)

Boston is the great mart for the manufactures of New England, & the vicinity is noted for the variety & extent of its manufactures; there are in the city agencies for over 150 large establishments. The capital returned as being employed in manufactures in the city alone in 1850, was $10,533,890, & the annual value of manufactured articles, $31,071,712, since which time the increase has been without precedent.—Boston is connected with Liverpool, Engl., with a line of steam ships, leaving weekly; & has communication by steam with the principal Atlantic ports of the U. S.

Boston Water Works.—Long Pond, or Lake Cochituate, as it was named in 1846, lies in the towns of Farmingham, Natic, & Wayland. The gatehouse of the aqueduct is in Wayland, near the Natic line. It contains 659 acres, and drains about 11,400 acres, & is in some places 70 or 80 feet in depth. It is divided into two sections by a dam, the northerly section connected with the aqueduct, contains 200 acres, and the southerly section, which is held in reserve, contains 459 acres. It will supply 10,000,000 gallons of water daily. The distance from the lake to Beacon Hill reservoir is 20 miles. Two Compensation Reservoirs to supply the water rights on Concord River have been constructed. The Whitehall reservoir in Hopkinton, contains 576 acres, & is capable of yielding for three months 12,000,000 gallons of water every 24 hours, & the Fort Meadow Brook reservoir, in Marlborough, contains 200 ac. The range between low & high water is 7¼ feet. At its highest elevation it is about 12 feet above the bottom of the aqueduct at the outlet, & 135 feet high water at Boston. The fall from the lake to the Brookline reservoir is 4.26 feet, making the height of the reservoir at its lowest level 120.60 ft. above high water mark. The fountain on the Common is supplied with the means of furnishing a great variety of jets, many of which are of great beauty. The Brookline reservoir is a beautiful structure of irregular elliptic shape, covering 58 acres, & is capable of containing about 100,000,000 gallons. The Beacon Hill reservoir is a structure of massive stone masonry capable of holding 2,674,961 wine gallons, and its mean horizontal section equal to 28,014 square feet. The South Boston reservoir is situated on Telegraph Hill, the old Dorchester Heights. It is entered by a 20-inch pipe from the main in Tremont, through Dover street, over the South Free Bridge. The water is about 16 feet deep of the same height as Beacon Hill reservoir, & will contain 7,000,000 gallons. The main pipe for the supply of East Boston is 20 inches in diameter, and commences at Haymarket Square. It crosses Charles river on the lower side of the Warren bridge, passing the draw by means of an inverted syphon, thence through the square & Chelsea street in Charlestown, & across Mystic river, passing this stream by two inverted syphons. The main is then continued along the Salem turnpike, & through Williams & Marginal streets in Chelsea, & about 400 feet beyond the grounds of the United States Marine Hospital it turns & crosses Chelsea creek to the reservoir on Eagle hill. The channel of this creek is passed by a flexible pipe instead of a pile bridge & syphon near the East Boston Free Bridge. The reservoir is 30 feet deep, & will hold, when filled to a level three feet below the top, 5,591,816 wine gallons. The water is conveyed from the Cochituate lake to the Brookline reservoir in an aqueduct excepting 965 feet across the valley of Charles river, where are two parallel iron pipes of 30 inches diameter. There are two tunnels, one in Newton of 2,410¾ feet, & another in Brookline of 1,123¾ feet. The former passes through a hill 86 feet below the surface at its highest elevation. The aqueduct is built principally of brick masonry in an oval egg shape six feet four inches in height by five feet in width, and has a gradual fall for the whole distance, including the pipe section, of 3¼ inches to the mile nearly. With this fall & a depth three feet ten inches of water when the conduit is two-thirds full, it is estimated to convey 11,000,000 gallons per day. From the Brookline reservoir it is conveyed to the city in two main 36-in. iron pipes.

Boston was governed by a body of select men according to the custom of the towns of New England, until 1821. Before this the people could not be brought to consent to adopt a city government. The legislative power of the city is now vested in the City Council chosen annually on the second Monday of December, consisting of eight alderman, chosen from the city at large, & forty-eight common councilmen, four chosen in each of the twelve wards. The executive power is vested in the Mayor & aldermen. The municipal year commences on the first Monday in January. Boston was founded in August, 1630. The first church was built in 1632. Here was enacted the first scenes of the great drama of the revolution. The British army in 1775, to the number of 10,000, had possession of the town, & from this place they went out to open the war at Lexington, & to engage in the hard-fought battle of Bunker Hill. They were compelled at length by the American troops entrenched on Dorchester Heights to withdraw from the town & harbor in March 1776, whence they proceeded to the south. No portion of the American people engaged more actively in the cause of independence than the inhabitants of Boston, or contributed more largely towards its accomplishment. John Hancock, the first president of the American Congress, & the first to sign the Declaration of Independence, was a citizen of Boston, as were also several other leaders of the war of the revolution. It has also the honor of being the birth-place of Benjamin Franklin.

BOSTON, a parl. & munic. bor., seaport town & pa. of England, co. Lincoln, pts. Kesteven, in a rich agricultural district, on the Estuary of the Witham, 5 m. from the sea & 28 m. S.E. Lincoln. Area of pa. 5,220 ac. Pop. of pa. 1851, 15,132; of the t., 14,733; of bor., 17,518. The town is divided into two nearly equal parts by the Witham, here crossed by an iron bridge of one arch, 86 feet in span; it is well built, paved, & lighted, but suffers much from the want of good water. Its pa. church, built in 1309, is the largest without aisles in the kingdom; length 382 ft.; breadth 99 feet. The tower, 262 ft. in height, resembles that of Antwerp cathedral, & forms a landmark visible 40 m. distant. Boston has a grammar school founded 1554, blue-coat & numerous other schools, a town hall, formerly belonging to a religious guild, a union poor-house, house of correction, bor. gaol, custom-house, large market house, theatre, & vauxhall, with assembly rooms, 3 public libraries, several banks, manufs. of sail-cloth, canvas, & sacking, 2 or 3 iron foundries, & some shipyards. Owing to neglect in keeping the river clear, the trade became nearly extinct in the last century, but recent improvements now enable vessels of 300 tons to unload in the town, whence the navigation is continued to Lincoln by small steamers & barges. Chief imports, Baltic produce, with coal & manufactured goods coastwise. Chief exports, oats, wool, & woad, which last is extensively produced in the vicinity. Mkts. (chiefly for fish, poultry, corn, & wool,) Wed. & Sat. Large cattle fairs, May 4 & 5, Aug. 5, Dec. 11. Horse fair, Nov. 20 to 23. Boston sends two members to H. of C. It is also a polling-place for the Holland division of the co. In the reign of Edward III., & subsequently, Boston was one of the principal commercial ports of England. Fox, the biographer of the martyrs, was born here in 1517. The town gives the title of Viscount to the Irby family.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, Gesoriacum, a fortified seaport town of France, cap. arrond., dep. Pas de Calais, on the English Channel at the mouth of the Lianne, & on the Boulogne & Amiens r. r., 140 m. from Paris, & 112 from London, & 19 S.W. Calais. Lat. (of the column) 50° 44′ 32″ N., lon., 1° 36′ 15″ E. Pop. 1853, 31,000, of whom a great number are English residents. It is divided into the Upper & Lower towns. The first on a hill, whence the English coast is distinctly visible, is well, though irregularly built, & has 2 squares ornamented with fountains, a feudal citadel, & ramparts, a modern cathedral, an episcopal palace, a town-hall, & a house in which Le Sage, the author of Gil Blas, lived & died. The Lower, or new town, stretching from the Upper town to the sea, is newly & regularly built and more populous. It has fine public baths, with ball & concert rooms, a comm. college, a theatre, a museum, including a library of 23,000 vols., a hospital, custom-house & barracks. Boulogne has also an English library & reading room, 6 English churches, several excellent hotels, a great number of boarding-schools (both French & English), a school of navigation, tribunal of commerce, societies of agriculture, commerce, & arts: manufs. of coarse woollens, sail-cloth, cordage, bottle glass, & earthenware. In its vicinity are important marble quarries. Its fisheries are very extensive, & furnish the chief supply of fish for the Paris markets; but the town is mainly indebted for its prosperity to its English residents, who, since the peace, have resorted thither in great numbers, particularly during the summer. Steamers make the passage to Folkstone in two hours, & to London in about 12 hours; & the number of passengers who disembark here annually exceed 50,000. The port is not very easy of access, being formed by 2 wooden piers stretching out only to low-water mark, but the tide rises upwards of 16 ft., & ships find pretty good anchorage about a half mile from the harbor. It was on the heights of Boulogne that the Emperor Caligula, A.D. 40, encamped an army of 100,000 men for the fruitless purpose of invading Britain, & here also, in 1804, nearly 18 centuries later, the Emperor Napoleon assembled an army of 180,000 men, & a flotilla of 2,400 transports with the same design. The Colonne Napoléone, a column 164 feet high, nearly one mile from the town, commemorates the latter futile attempt.

BOURBON, p-v., Marshall co., Ia.

BOURBON, an isl. of the Mascarene group, Indian O., forming a French colony, cap. St. Denis, in lat. 20° 51′ 43″ S., lon. 55° 30′ 16″ E. Length 38 m.; breadth 28 m. Pop. 1847, 108,000. The island is of volcanic origin, & of an elliptical form. It is traversed from N. to S. by a chain of mntns. which divides it into two portions, differing in formation, climate, & productions; these are on the E. partie du vent (windward) & W. partie sous le vent (leeward) side. The chief summits are the Piton de Neiges, an extinct volcano, 10,100 ft., Grand Benard 9,500 ft., Cimandef 7,300 ft., & Piton de la Fournaise, an active volcano, 7,218 ft. above the level of the sea. There are no extensive plains, but the mntns. which cover the entire surface are separated by narrow valleys; it is watered by numerous streams, all of which are rapid & none navigable. The climate has recently undergone a great change. Bourbon, which long enjoyed the reputation of being the most healthy spot of the colonial world—an insular paradise—is now visited by the bloody flux & the typhoid fever of Bourbon, which attacks every European after a residence of 4 or 5 years. Neither earthquakes, yellow fever, nor poisonous serpents are known in the island. The heat is not excessive; mean temp. at St. Denis 77° Fahr. Annual average of rain 128 in. Yearly mean of wind 309 days E., 56 days W. Winter, 1st May to 1st October; rainy season, 1st Nov. to 30th April. The prevailing winds drive the rain clouds to the E. side of the island, & often originate the most terrific hurricanes; on such occasions the waves, usually 3 to 4 ft., rise to 50 or 60 ft. in height, & rage with incalculable power, the sky assumes a copper color, the temp. rises to a maximum intensity, the barom. sinks to its lowest point, rain falls in torrents, & the wind blows with resistless force,—men, animals, trees, & even houses are overturned. Bourbon has no port, & its anchorage is insecure. In 1843-4, 11 large vessels were wrecked near its shores. The soil is very fertile in the vicinity of the coast. The chief products are sugar, coffee, cloves, maize, rice, & tobacco. The corn raised is insufficient for consumption, it is only used by Europeans, & manioc is the chief food of the slaves. Principal exports, sugar, coffee, cloves, dye-woods, & saltpetre; imports wheat, oil, wine, cattle, timber, salt, glass, & manufactured goods. Bourbon was discovered in 1545 by the Portuguese, who called it Mascarenhas, from the name of their chief. The French, who formed a colony in 1655, named it Bourbon, which, under the empire, was changed to ile Bonaparte. It was occupied by the English in 1810, & restored to France in 1814. The island is divided into the arronds. St. Denis, comprising the great natural division called the "partie du vent," & the arrond. St. Paul, comprising the "partie sous le vent."

BRAHMAPUTRA, ("the son of Brahma," vulg. Burrampooter,) one of the great rivers of S. Asia, & forming the proper E. boundary of Hindostan. It is supposed to take its origin in Tibet, on the N. side of the Himalaya mnts., about lat. 30° 31′ N., lon. 82° E., although some other conjectures would make its source still farther to the E., about lon. 97° E. After an E.ward course to about lon. 95°, it bends S.ward, & breaks through the Himalaya into upper Assam, where it is joined by the Dihing & Dihong, dividing into two branches, so wide apart as to encircle the isl. Maguli, 70 m. long. The united branch again separates & encloses a larger isl. Kallung, 75 m. in length. It has now a W.ward course throughout Assam to lon. 90°, where it again bends S.ward, & after traversing the Bengal dists. Rungpoor, Mymunsing, Dacca, & Tiperah, it joins the Bay of Bengal, in lat. 22° 50′ N., lon. 90° 40′ E., by an estuary 20 m. in width, in conjunction with the E. & largest arm of the Ganges. Where the Brahmaputra enters the plains of Bengal near Goalpara, it is about 1,200 yards wide, & very rapid. At about 25° N. lat., a large branch, the Jena, unites it with the Ganges. Its entire course is estim. at 1,500. Principal tributs. in Bengal, the Soormah, Barak, Goomty, Teesta, Megna, the name of which last it assumes after their junction. In Assam, it receives at least 60 affluents, & encloses many large isls. Its current is so violent as generally to unfit it for navigation. It inundates the country S. of the Himalaya from April to Sept., discharging into the sea a greater quantity of water than the Ganges. Its banks, considered mostly jungle & marsh lands, are often quite destitute of tracks.

The empire is divided into 19 provinces, 14 situated along the shores of the ocean, & 4 in the interior, the relative pop. of which is exhibited in the preceding table, drawn up according to the most recent & accurate authorities.

The surface of Brazil is about equally divided into uplands & lowlands, or valleys. Two parallel mountain ranges traverse the country from N. to S., forming elevated ridges of table-land. The greatest height of the central range being from 6,000 to 7,000 ft. Several minor ranges intersect the country, enclosing tracts, some of which are elevated, & others low-lying plains. The N. part of Brazil consists of the greater part of the vast plain through which flows the river Amazon, & its tributaries; & varying in width from 350 to 800 m. The rivers, lakes, & water courses are so numerous as completely to intersect this great plain, the soil of which is deep & soft, & covered for the most part with dense forests. South E. of this is another plain. The principal rivs. in this direction are the Tocantins, Araguay, Paranahiba, San Francisco, Belmonte, Doce, Paraiba do Sul, & Rio Grande do Sul, all of large size, but of difficult navigation, in consequence of rapids, &c. The table-land on the W. is separated from the Andes of Bolivia by a large & extensive plain, traversed by those rivers which join to form the Madeira; the elev. of this plain is from 1,200 to 1,500 ft. On the banks of the Iriuana, & W.ward to the N. branch of the Serra Parecis, extends a sandy & nearly barren desert, called Campos dos Parecis. From 7 lakes (Sete Lagoas) on this table-land rises the river Paraguay, which flows S.ward through a swampy country, & then through the great plain of Paraguay to join the Parana. The latter has a course of 1,000 m., & receives the Rio Grande, the Paranahiba, Sapucahy, Pardo, &c. Several small streams flow in a S.E. direction into the Atlantic. The Uruguay flows S. through another table-land of smaller dimensions to the plain of the Missiones. The principal lakes are Patos, an enlargement of the Rio Grande & L. Mirim. Many others of less size are in the W. provinces. The climate of the Amazon valley is of a tropical nature; only the dry & rainy seasons are not very distinctly marked. The nights are cloudless; but in the morning clouds accumulate & continue till the afternoon, when thunder & lightning, with torrents of rain, prevail for two hours, & all again is clear. The climate of Central & W. Brazil is more varied, the heat in the dry season being excessive, while frosty nights are of frequent occurrence in winter; rain in some situations is of rare occurrence. The climate in the valley of the S.E. coast is, notwithstanding its low latitude, as genial as that of Italy, being clear & serene, & refreshed by the sea breeze from the E. At Rio Janeiro the ann. mean of Fahr. Therm. is 77°. The shores of the E. coast are generally low-lying, the ground rising gradually behind into the mountain region, which runs parallel to the coast. The harbors are generally good, particularly those of Rio de Janeiro & Bahia. The pop. of Brazil consists of Europeans, whites born in the country, who call themselves Brazilians; Mulattoes, Mamalucoes, or offsprings of whites & native Indians; Negroes; Mestizoes, or Zamboes, mixed castes between Negroes & Indians; & the Aborigines, or American Indians. The slave pop. consists of Negroes & mixed breeds. Of the Aborigines, a portion are in a civilized condition, who are styled Cabocloes; the rest are in a savage & unreclaimed state.

There is little political division of castes; & intermarriages among the different races are common. Aboriginal slavery has been legally abolished; & the laws regarding slaves are, on the whole, not severe nor stringent. Thirty-five holidays in the year, besides Saturdays, are allowed to the slave to work for himself; & a slave can demand his liberty on paying a certain sum equal to his value.

In every town there are schools for teaching the rudiments, to which all citizens are admitted free. There are 2 universities, one in Santo Paulo & 1 in Pernambuco, of which the former is held in high estimation, & printing presses are established in the principal towns. Throughout the empire Roman Catholicism is the prevailing & recognized creed. The exercise of other religions is only tolerated within the domestic circle. The monastic system is greatly on the decline. The country along the coast & the banks of some of the rivs., besides some extensive tracts in Minas Geraes have been brought under cultivation, but it is calculated not 1 ac. out of 150; so that by far the greater portion of the surface remains in a state of nature. The dense forests furnish almost every variety of useful & ornamental timber, more than 100 species of palms, logwood, mahogany, Brazil, & numerous other dyewoods, with sassafras, sarsaparilla, ipecacuanha, & a great variety of other drugs. Cocoa, caoutchouc, & tobacco, are indigenous products; maize, sugar, coffee, cotton, rice, wheat, & tobacco, have been introduced by European culture. The culture of the tea plant was, some years ago, unsuccessfully attempted by a colony of Chinese, in the prov. São Paulo; the yerba mate, or Paraguay tea, is, however, an abundant product of the W. provs. The horse, ox, & sheep, derived from European stocks, have long been naturalized in the country; & vast herds of cattle are reared on all the more open parts. Hides, horns, bones, tallow, & other animal products, form leading articles of the expt. trade. Wild animals comprise the jaguar, hyena, tiger-cat, & other rapacious genera; with the tapir, wild-hog, &c., & a great variety of birds of the richest plumage; the animal as well as the vegetable products here presenting the greatest diversity. The diamond mines of Minas Geraes are the most productive at present known. Estimated value of the diamonds produced here, from 1740 to 1850, exceeds $20,000,000. Other gems, & large quantities of gold, besides silver, copper, iron, & platinum, are among the mineral products of the same prov. Manufs. are almost wholly in their infancy in Brazil, being confined to cotton weaving, tanning, & the production of goods of primary necessity; & nearly all branches of industry are performed by slave labor. From its central position in reference to the chf. commercial countries of the globe, & its very extens. line of coast, Brazil is most favorably situated for trade, which, though extens., is not yet nearly commensurate with the resources of the empire. The articles imported in 1850 consist of cottons, 42,580 packages; woollens, 5,488; linens, 5,695; silks, 1,088, & mixed goods, 1,263:—codfish, 54,902 quintals; coal, 42,007 tons; ale & porter, 28,704 barrels; flour, 283,896 barrels; candles —sperm, 90, composition, 6,052, & tallow, 1,043 boxes; wines, Portugal, 14,033 pipes, Mediterranean, 7,644, & Bordeaux, 4,421; butter, 25,561 firkins; cordage, 5,480 coils, &c.

The produce of the country exported, consisted of—coffee, 1,846,213 bags; hides, 147,296; sugar, 7,824 cases; rum, 3,892 pipes; rice, 8,229 bags; horns, 256,949; tobacco, 28,755 rolls; rosewood, 36,547 pieces; half-tanned hides, 12,744; tapioca, 17,737 barrels, &c. The imports from the U. States, in 1851, amounted in value to $3,764,409, consisting mostly of flour & other provisions, & cotton manufs.; the exports at the same period, amounted to $10,547,360, mostly in coffee, sugar, & hides.

The government is an hereditary limited monarchy; the legislative power is vested in a senate of 55 members & a chamber of deputies, composed of 112 members, the latter elected by free citizens having property to 200 milreas annually. Each member of the legislative receives a salary. Parliaments are quartennial, each sitting lasting 4 months. The justices of the peace are elected by the people in each district. Trial by jury exists in both civil & criminal courts. In Rio & Bahia are superior courts with 8 judges each; & the former city is also the seat of a supreme judicial tribunal, with 12 judges appointed by the crown. Neither titles of dignity, nor seats in the upper chamber, are hereditary. The executive government is in the 6 departments of the emp., viz., Interior, Justice, Exterior, Navy, War, & Finance. Total expenditure, in 1853–4, estimated at 29,633,000 milreas; the revenue for the same year estimated at 32,853,000. Public foreign debt, March, 1852, $30,047,295. The standing army in 1852, consisted of 22,540 men, & the navy of 50 vessels, carrying 294 guns. Brazil was first discovered by Pedro Alvares Cabral, in 1500; & began to be colonized by the Portuguese in 1531. In 1808, King John VI. of Portugal took up his residence in Brazil; & in 1815 constituted it a kingdom. In 1822 it declared itself an independent state; & it obtained a constitution in 1825. Rio de Janeiro is the cap. of the empire & the seat of government.

BRAZOS, river, Tex., rises in the elevated table lands known as the "Staked Plain," in lat. 33° N., lon. 102° W., & after a course of about 950 miles, enters the Gulf of Mexico. It has a bar of shifting sands off the entrance, the depth of water on which varies from 4 to 8 feet. This river is navigable for small craft to the Hidalgo falls, a distance of 250 miles. The lands bordering it are reputed to be unsurpassed for the growth of sugar, cotton, & Ind. corn, &c.
